VEGETINE

WILL CURE RHEUMATISM.

MR. ALBERT CROOKER, the well-known druggist and apothecary, of Springvale, Me., always advises every one troubled with rheumatism to try VEGETINE.

Read His Statement.

SPRINGVALE, ME., Oct. 12, 1876.
Dear Sir:—Fifteen years ago last fall I was taken sick with rheumatism, was unable to move until the next April. From that time until three years ago this fall I suffered everything with rheumatism. Sometimes there would be weeks at a time that I could not step one step; these attacks were quite often. I suffered everything that a man could. Over three years ago last spring I commenced taking VEGETINE and followed it up until I had taken seven bottles; I have had no rheumatism since that time. I always advise every one that is troubled with rheumatism to try VEGETINE, and not suffer for years as I have done. This statement is gratuitous as far as Mr. Stevens is concerned. Yours, etc., ALBERT CROOKER, Chemist of A. Crooker & Co., Druggists and Apothecaries.

VEGETINE HAS ENTIRELY CURED ME.

MR. H. R. STEVENS: BOSTON, October, 1876.
Dear Sir:—My daughter, after having a severe attack of Whooping Cough, was left in a feeble state of health. Being advised by a friend she tried the VEGETINE, and after using a few bottles was fully restored to health.

I have been a great sufferer from Rheumatism. I have taken several bottles of the Vegetine for this complaint, and am happy to say it has entirely cured me. I have recommended the Vegetine to others with the same good results. It is a great cleanser and purifier of the blood; it is pleasant to take and I can cheerfully recommend it.

JAMES MORSE, 394 Athens Street.

Rheumatism is a Disease of the Blood.

The blood in this disease is found to contain an excess of uric acid. VEGETINE acts by converting the blood from its diseased condition to a healthy circulation. VEGETINE regulates the bowels which is very important in this complaint. One bottle of Vegetine will give relief, but to effect a permanent cure it must be taken regularly, and may take several bottles, especially in cases of long standing. VEGETINE is sold by all druggists. Try it, and your verdict will be the same as that of thousands before you, who say, "I never felt so well as from the use of Vegetine," which is composed exclusively of barks, roots and herbs.

"VEGETINE" says a Boston physician, "has no equal as a blood purifier. Hearing of its many wonderful cures, after all other remedies had failed, I visited the laboratory and convinced myself of its genuine merit. It is prepared from barks, roots and herbs, each of which is highly effective, and they are compounded in such a manner as to produce astonishing results."

VEGETINE NOTHING EQUAL TO IT.

SOUTH SALEM, MASS., Nov. 14, 1876.
MR. H. R. STEVENS: Dear Sir:—I have been troubled with Scrofula and Liver Complaint for three years; nothing ever did me any good until I commenced using the VEGETINE. I am now getting along first-rate, and still using the Vegetine. I consider there is nothing equal to it for such complaints. Can heartily recommend it to everybody. Yours truly, MRS. LIZZIE M. PACKARD, No. 14 Lagrange Street, South Salem, Mass.

THE COST OF A KING.

VICTOR EMMANUEL'S PRIVATE PURSE.

poor on Two and a Half Million Dollars a Year—Three Hundred and Forty-three Palaces and Countless Benefactions.

From the New York Evening Post.

A correspondent writing from Rome in connection with the proposition to vote the King of Italy an income of twelve to fourteen million of francs, of which three million are for his personal expenses thus depicts the constant drain to which the King's purse is subjected.

"When we remember that his expenditures are very great and must be proportioned to those of the monarchs of Europe; that his gifts and his charities are made in sums adapted to the magnificence in which he lives, and that he has an army of servants and dependents the wonder disappears, and we are only surprised that he can live on so little. Mosaic tables and pictures that cost twenty or thirty thousand dollars each; one hundred and fifty watches at once for presents; costly diamond decorations; oil portraits of himself; Arab horses; these are the gifts of the king.

THE KING'S ALMS.

His gifts to charity are made also in large sums. An instance of this is the aid which has been recently given to Madame Schwabe's charity schools in Naples from the king's private income. The sum of twelve hundred dollars annually has been promised her, and this is only one out of many cases of charity. These schools deserve the attention which Madame Schwabe's unceasing efforts have succeeded in attracting to them. She has more than three hundred children attending them, and has given large sums of her own money to support them.

VICTOR EMMANUEL'S HORSES.

The king has dependents and pensioners of all ranks, beside stables famous for the rare horses which he has collected in them. A new building for stables has been recently built on the Quirinal which is itself a palace. The big-eyed, soft-skinned, intelligent and beautiful creatures—forty or fifty of them—ranged in stalls on either side, turn their heads to look at you as you enter their royal abode, and then return to their oats perfectly contented with their condition.

TOO MANY HOMES.

Besides these expenses the king is the possessor of three hundred and forty-three palaces more or less magnificent and expensive. It is said that merely to keep them in order and pay the officers and servants attached to them costs two hundred thousand dollars annually. Imagine what an encumbrance it must be to own so many homes that the whole year would not be long enough to pass more than a day in each of them! For Victor Emmanuel, whose tastes are simple, and who seems to be always anxious to fly from the pomp and ceremony of court life, it must be an especial burden.

During the papal and Bourbonic reigns, when Italy was divided into its seven different states, the riches and power of the kingdom were in the hands of the priests and aristocrats, who built churches and palaces while the poor lived without houses, the sick without hospitals, orphans without asylums and children without schools. The King has fallen heir to the palaces of his predecessors, but it is doubtful whether it was a goodly heritage, as he seems anxious to part with some of them. These palaces are famous all over the world. There is one at Venice looking out upon the water and upon the Piazzotta San Marco, one at Milan, one at Turin, the Pitti palace at Florence, famous for its treasures of ancient and modern art; the Quirinal at Rome, once occupied by the popes; the magnificent palace at Naples; others at Palermo, Parma, Bologna. Indeed almost every city of Italy has one or more royal palaces. The wealth of carving, gilding, statues, pictures, tapestries and all the luxuries of life gathered in these three hundred and forty-three palaces is immense, and yet the king is poor, has made debts, and is reduced to the humiliating necessity of asking parliament to increase his allowance.

ROYAL POVERTY.

The ministry presented the bill, which was supported by the majority of the more influential members of the house, but no less than thirty-one independent spirits opposed the measure and desired to place the direction of what is called the Lista Civile, or the expenses of the court, except the private expenses of the king under the control of parliament. This party, however, is not the most influential in parliament, and a number of the opposite opinion said that their proposition was one of "immense inpropriety."

The antiquity of the House of Savoy was called to mind by those members who advocated giving the king fourteen million francs (more than two and a half million of dollars) annually. That royal house has existed a thousand years, and during that time, with every opportunity to do so, it has never enriched itself and has remained comparatively poor while many of the noble families have grown rich. The brave and noble history of this royal family, the traditions of their courage and generosity, were recalled, as well as the patriotism and generosity of Victor Emmanuel himself. Many of these palaces, which were in fact museums of art, have been presented by the king to the nation, and they are now open to the public. This bill also enumerated ten or twelve palaces which the king, finding them more expensive and troublesome than useful, would like to make over to the government or to cities where they are. These are small villas and parks held really for the good of the villages near them, which he was obliged to keep in order. Of these were the park and hill adjoining the royal palace at Caserta, which he wished to return to that town. The lovely green hill called San Leucio, on the right of the cascade when you enter the royal park, is the only one of the Appennines near Caserta which is not bleak and gray and deserted, and the inhabitants did not wish it to be given to the city, divided into small lots and shorn of all its beauty. Upon this hill is the delightful park of Caserta, and the rest of it is divided into parks attended by foresters, where several hundred bears are kept for the chase. The other hill is San Silvestro, down which falls a stream, conducted for miles to Caserta, and which forms the delight and wonder of the place. The people of this town therefore made complaints and parliament has sustained them, so that the king will be obliged to keep this inconvenient possession for the good of the commonwealth.

When the Russians sent word to Osman Pasha that they intended to send back the 5,000 prisoners they had taken at Dubnik and Telis the Turkish commander-in-chief said that if they did send them back he would mow them down with grape-shot, seize the coward Hakkı Pasha, who was with them, and have him shot on the spot. He told the Grand Duke's messenger in a somewhat bombastic manner that he might as well prepare for a regular siege, as he had provisions for eight months, a statement utterly untrue. He doubtless said this to attempt to deceive the Russians. At this time the daily ration to the troops had been reduced by one-third.

A new safety cannon that shoots an anchor from ships in distress has lately been tried at Bremerhaven. From a cannon with a diameter of five inches, an anchor weighing seventeen pounds was shot, attached to a double rope two thousand four hundred feet in length and weighing thirty-two pounds, to a distance of three hundred yards, by which a stronger rope was pulled out to the ship with which ship and men could be drawn ashore.

THE EXPERIMENT of educating boys for the navy has proved of such marked benefit in increasing the efficiency of the service that Congress will be asked to improve and extend the system.

Tommy came home from school and handed to his father the teacher's report on his progress during the month. "This is very unsatisfactory, Tom; you've a very small number of good marks, I'm not all pleased with it." "I told the teacher you wouldn't be, but he wouldn't alter it."
