How He Puts on Style at the Expense of the devermments The Washington correspondent of the New York Sun thus alindes to Brewster's style:

The latest sensation in Washington is the newly-furnished and decorated rooms of Attorney-General Brewster, furniture and decoration have all been made from designs specially prepared for Messra. W. B. Moses & Son, of this city, in pursuance of an order from Attorney-General Brewster himself, with carte blanche to make the reoms peract. The principal room, the one used by the Attorney-General to transact official business, is furnished with abony chairs and lounges sovered with the finest morocco leather, and said to be the most elegant and costly suit of furniture in Washington. The centre table, designed and toads to order, is a gem of its kind. Atthough measuring only six feet by four, it cost $250. This table has for a cover an exquisite piece of Algerian lace work, said to have cost $100. The smaller tables are also elegantly fornished, and strictly in keeping with he central one. The carpet in this room, consisting of a Turkish rug, cost the government $1.200. To walk upon it make one imagine himself to be treading on down. To complete this there is also a rich, fleecy rag costing $150. But the most gorgeous adornments n this room are the curtains. They are made of the finest silk plush, rich and dazzling in texture, lined and interlined with thee Turkish satine, with cardinal cords and tassels. The brass rods, holders and other accessories are equally elaborate in partern, and were specially designed for the Department of Justice. There are four windows in this room, and, as the price paid for ach pair of curtains was $500, the cost is $1,200 for curtains alone.

The Attorney-Genera's private office, his sanctum sanctorum, is certainly remarkable for splendor and elegance. Furlish carpet and rugs, hundsome Oriental furniture covered with Prench velours, with silk plush trinonings, and elaborate frescoing and this pictures, make this a most luxuriant The Atterney-General's expeny inste ! ave already cost the faxwyers over Sabbe, and by the time the anomerable additions and finishing duches are given to these offices, making them what he designed they heald be, the cost will reach $10,000. but to whose advantage is all this?

On the One Price System.

ONE UNIFORM PRICE to ALL, AND THAT THE LOWEST KNOWN,

The usual system of selling Pianos and Organs is for the dealer to charge any price he can get for them without regard to either a fair profit or the customer's interest. But we are proud to say that this has never been our method of selling.

For the benefit of purchasers and to secure them the full value of their money, we established at the outset of our business, twelve years since,

THE ONE PRICE SYSTEM, and to this we attribute our immense and perous trade. Selling on this square prosperous trade. Sening on this square basis, renders it imperative that the price be the very lowest one that can be given. We are pledged to this. We always have done it, and we always will do it. It's our erced and our practice. No other Piano and Organ House deals on this principle.

Our prices, in plain figures, are placed on Organ House deals on this principle.

Our prices, in plain figures, are placed on every instrument. A child can buy as low as the sharpest trader. All other Houses have "high prices and give discounts."

The "One Price" system saves time in trading, and is the only satisfactory way to buyer and seller; for, on the high price and discount system, even though the customer buys, he is not sure that he has bottom prices.

ORGAN BUYERS.

Buy quick. Why? Because an advance in price is almost certain. Pianos and Organs are on a boom. The demand exceeds the supply. All the factories are behind orders. Dealers with eash in hand cannot get instruments as fast as warted. Prices of material and labor are advancing. The present low prices of Pianos and Organs cannot centinue, and will not again rule in the next ten years. Those who buy now will save money. Large contracts just made with manufacturers will enable us to quarantee present prices until Januagry 1st, 1883. After that we can promise nothing. Delays are dangerous.
