Our Duty.

"There is a duty which follows every responsibility of life." This is a sound proposition, and will hold good, no matter what station in life the individual may occupy. It applies as well to the rich as to the poor; to the wise and the unwise: to the Greek and to the barbarian. That duty and responsibility go hand in hand though all human effort and must be accepted as a cardinal truth. This duty may relate to the individual, or extend to those near or far. It is always present, and when properly understood is a faithful and unerring guide. Under ordinary circumstances, a majority of the people will perform a duty when made plainly known. The individual in his individual capacity can oftimes reconcile his conscience to certain actions when he has proven recreant to his duty as an individual; but the difficulties of such a settlement increase when the neglect affects the conditions and rights of others. When a person by his own act joins with others! to promote the advancement of any cause or for the attainment of any purpose their sense of duty should become more enlarged become greater.

be a definite object to work for, and should be followed by a unity of action on the part of every member. Just so long as there was unity. of purpose among the members of the Farmers' Alliance its strength and influence was powerful. Their achievements staggered the imaginations of its most ardent supporters, and if all its members had continued faithful to their obligation the accomplishments would have increased in proportion to the amount of duty performed.

The duty involved upon each individual member of an Alliance must include a desire to work for the advancement and best inter ests of the order, and the only possible way to make a success of any organization is to enjoy the confidence of each other and back it up with a full understanding that in things essential IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE unity, and in all things charity. Act of 1896 providing for the registration of electors, the books of the The unity feature of the organization was what gave it Herculean strength in its beginning, and if members will restore it to its former prestage it will be a greater power for good than ever be fore. That designing men found their way into the organization for selfish purposes has been abundantly demonstrated, but to such impositions and should Alliance constitutional inhibition. not be condemned for that reason. When once entrapped and taste Jurors and witnesses in court of of the tempting fruit, they beten violate their obligations and come forever afterwards fugitives are branded with the epithet of to their obligation, and like perjurors, and forever afterwards Ephriam of old, become "joined they have the mark of Cain; if to their idols." Alliancemen be not in complexion they do in on your guard and observe duty. character, and so it should be with every violator of the constitional obligation imposed upon those who join the Alliance and then, for some imaginary offense, leave it to begin a tirade of abuse and misrepresentation.

A strict adherence to duty will rid the Alliance of all factional strife and eliminate the demagogue, the traitor, and men with selfish designs. It will add courage and strength to the organization and give dignity of power and strength to the Order. It will crystalize the Order into one solid phalanx whose ranks cannot be broken by slander or misrepresentation and secure it. against dissensions within its ranks. It is no longer the assualts of its avowed enemies that threaten its destruction, but the insidious attacks of disreputable members who have gone over to the laughter the evening was passed enemy, bearing gifts, "thrift may follow fawning." These are the dreaded enemies of the Alliance and can only be defeated by severe restriction and rigid performance of duty. When there is a unity of dependance among the members, and one brother can depend upon the other members to discharge their duty at all times and under all circumstances, loyalty to the Order becomes absolute and a determination to do right becomes unswerving. Nothing indicates because the responsibilities have the power and ultimate triumph of the principles of the Alliance In all organizations there should more forcibly than the manner in which the membership are standing by their duty. The Alliance, since its organization, has done more to educate the people on all economic questions than all the schools and colleges in our country combined. The former has taught by object lessons, demonstrating in a practical way the wheres and wherefores of business transactions and opening up the avenues to wealth. happiness and prosperity by uncovering and exposing frauds to which our people had been for a long time cruelly subjected.

Generally, in all schools and colleges, theories are taught, leaving the student with vague and indefinite ideas of the practical duties of life, and hence the multitude of ignorant, helpless, improvident people who are always running after a rainbow in search of unearned riches.

It is the duty of Alliancemen to watch and guard themselves against the insidious endeavors of enemies to entrap them into the meshes with snares of deception. Fish are caught with bait of some description, and so it is often the misfortune with Alliancemen when they yield to the subtle allurements of combinations that work oppression and the Alliance is not an exception whose operations are inimical to
