OBITUARY.

Death always brings sorrow to the heart of the bereaved. The aged head of the family left sad and alone thinks himself most bereaved and so with the bride or groom, parent or child, but when young parents are called to give up their only child—the center of their mutual affection—death seems a most unwilling messenger.

This thought causes a feeling of the deepest sympathy to well up in our hearts for Mr. and Mrs. G. C. McManus. Their loving and only babe has been borne by angel hands to Him who gave it. Fret not, fond parents, but rather rejoice that it has only gone home in advance and ever beckons you homeward.

God sent His angel to our home One bright evening in May, To bid our darling jewel come To Heaven's endless day. They closed her beautiful bright eyes And made her go to sleep. They took her far beyond the skies And left us here to weep.

FRIEND.
