American Presbyterianism.

The Tennessee centennial management set apart Thursday, October 28th, as Presbyterian day, which was a grateful tribute to a religious body which has played a conspicuous part in shaping the early affairs of this country.

A writer in the Nashville American, commenting upon the influence of the Presbyterian church upon the early life of this country, makes the following observation:

The Presbyterian in colonial days contained a large element of Scotch-Irish, who were either banished from their homes or became voluntary exiles to escape intolerable oppressions. They brought with them hatred of despotism and unquenchable thirst for liberty. It is not surprising, therefore, that as Bancroft says, "the first voice publicly raised in America to dissolve all connection with Great Britain came from the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians." The first body to declare for open resistance was the Presbyterian synod of Philadelphia, and the first declaration of Independence was that put forth by the Presbyterians of Mecklenburg county, N. C. Having helped to precipitate the conflict, they helped to fight it out. In the battle of the Cowpens General Morgan, who commanded, and General Pickens, who made all arrangements for battle, were Presbyterian elders, "and nearly all under their command," says a trustworthy writer, "were Presbyterians."

In the battle of Kings mountain Colonels Campbells, Williams, Cleveland, Shelby, Sevier, Hamilton and Major Jones were all Presbyterian elders, and the bodies of their troops were collected from Presbyterian settlements. These two battles were of no mean importance, because they marked the turn of the tide in war. It would entitle the Presbyterians to some recognition on an occasion like this to mention the one fact that "Old Hickory" ended his great career as an elder in the Presbyterian church. He was a typical Scotch-Irishman, well fitted when once turned in the right direction to illustrate the perseverance of the saints. Just after his death two of his friends met on the streets of New York City. One mentioned the sad event to the other, and asked whether he supposed Jackson had gone to heaven. "Set it down" was the reply, "that if he said he was going to Heaven he has gone there."

Use of Salt in Food.

"Are we eating too much salt?" is the question pronounced by the New York Journal of Hygiene, in a discussion of what it calls "the salt habit," or the excessive use of salt in food. Some salt is necessary in food, perhaps, but many persons take too much, and upon articles on which it is unnecessary. They want their meat, fish, potatoes, melons, butter, tomatoes, turnips, bread, etc., positively salt. They hold that "brings out the flavor," and consider it in the same class with sugar as a sweetener. The Journal argues that as a result the skin and kidneys are excessively taxed to get rid of the salt, and both are injured by it. Few people have healthy skins, and it is believed that many cases of derangement of the kidneys are due to the salt habit. There are a reaction against it in progress. But little salt is required by the human body, and those who know this are disposed to discard the voluntary use of it altogether.

Our hygienic experts have argued many people out of the eating of acid or sub-acid fruit. They have ingeniously assailed bread eating. The vegetarian long ago condemned a flesh diet. It should not specially surprise us that the onslaught is now made on salt. To be quite fair, however, it must be stated that the Journal of Hygiene does not prohibit salt for human consumption, but admonishes against excessive use. It is perhaps correct in that modification. The excessive use of anything, no matter how wholesome, is dangerous. Our own opinion is, however, that a majority of people use too little salt instead of too much. A judicious use of it will preserve health, and we know persons who have cured themselves of dyspepsia, neuralgia, etc., by partaking of salt, say take a half teaspoonful dissolved in a tumblerful of hot water before breakfast. Persons who have, by this simple process, broken up painful ailments, are disposed to regard salt as the true natural remedy for congestion and diseases following from it. Some people insist that they cannot take the dose and hold it on an empty stomach. Alas, for such unlucky brethren, with such weak stomachs.

With the Journal of Hygiene we reprobate excessive use of salt, but counsel its judicious use, both on articles of diet, in solution, as a beverage. It is maintained that nothing is better for an infant suffering with cholera infantum than salt codfish. A noble specimen of manhood, who was also a physician, assured us that his 80 years were borne healthily by copious use of salt. There is a gentleman on the Sand Hills who cured a distressing case of dyspepsia by the use of salt in water. Another gentleman says that he was rescued from an almost chronic neuralgia in the same way. He adds: "I use no drug. Salt is my health-preserver. I easily break up congestion by its proper use. I would have been spared many years of torture had I earlier known its savor and its virtues." All of which is respectfully referred to the Journal of Hygiene.—Augusta Chronicle.

BORN IN THIS STATE.

Mayor Of Greater New York Born in Pendleton.

The people of this State have been watching the municipal contest in New York with more than ordinary interest owing to the fact that the man who has now been elected mayor was born in this State. When it was known that Mr. Van Wyck had been elected the people of Columbia talked of his past history and an interesting story as to the man who was a carriage driver in the Van Wyck family at that time was recalled.

During the day reliable information was obtained about Mr. Van Wyck's South Carolina history from a lady who formerly lived near the family. Here is what she said:

"Robert Van Wyck, the newly-elected mayor of Greater New York, was born in Old Pendleton, S. C., and spent the early part of his life there. He has one brother, Augustus, who is living in New York. Sam, another brother, was killed early during the war in the northern part of Alabama. He was a Confederate soldier. His children live in Anderson, S. C. The remaining brother, William, died in New York. His sister is the wife of General Hoke of North Carolina. The father of this family was from New York. The mother was a daughter of Mr. Sam Maverick, who lived and died in Pendleton. Mr. Maverick was the owner of more real estate than any other one man in the State. His possessions lay in South Carolina, New York and Texas.

"One of Mr. Maverick's sons, Augustus, went early to Texas and was engaged in the war between the Texas republic and Mexico, and was at one time made prisoner by the Mexicans. His home was at San Antonio, where his descendants still live. He was associated with Crockett and barely escaped the massacre at the Alamo. At his death he owned more land in Texas than there is in the State of South Carolina and his cattle were so numerous that it was impracticable to brand them. The 'no brand' was the mark of his ownership, so that to this day unbranded cattle in Texas are called Maverick's.

"At one time the Van Wyck family brought to Pendleton Walter Gibson, as a carriage driver. Gibson married a Miss Lewis and gave up driving. Then he wandered away to one of the Sandwich islands, and eventually became practically the owner and king of the island. He was prime minister, and, though under the monarchy, he was practically dictator of the government.

A Merchant of Wellford Struck Down Before His Open Safe and Robbed—People Incensed.

Wellford, Nov. 3.—Mr. A. R. Ballenger, a merchant and prominent citizen of this vicinity, was robbed and probably murdered in his store tonight about 7 o'clock. Some one came to the door of his house and wished to go in the store. Mr. Ballenger went with him and was not seen any more until his son, becoming uneasy about his father's delayed return, went to the store. The door was locked, but was broken down by some of his neighbors and Mr. Ballenger was found stretched unconscious before the open door of the safe, with a wound in his head, from which the brains were oozing. No one saw the man except Mr. Ballenger, though his wife heard him call her husband to go to the store.

The robber made his exit through a back door, after having the precaution to lock the front door.

There is considerable excitement in the community as Mr. Ballenger is a citizen universally popular.—The State.

LATER:—A special to the Register states that Mr. Ballenger died Thursday morning at 9 o'clock.

For the Sake of the Next one.

"Why auntie, I thought you were all through?"

"So I am, with my work," returned Aunt Carrie, as with a smile she went on threading her needle. "I am only trying to smooth the way for the next one."

"Who, for instance?" questioned Will, curiously.

"Well, suppose that just as papa is starting for business to-morrow morning, he discovers that he is about to lose a button from his coat, and he can only spare about two minutes in which to have it sewed on, don't you think it would be quite a relief for mamma to find her needle already threaded?"

"Of course; for I shouldn't think one could find that little bit of an eye at all, if they were in a hurry. I had a dreadful time the other day when I wanted to mend my ball. I'm sure I would have been glad to be your next one, then."

"Suppose again, Will, that whoever dropped that piece of wood upon the cellar stairs had dropped to pick it up, remembering that some one else would be coming that way soon, wouldn't it be worth while? Just think how poor Bridget has suffered from her fall, and how the household has been inconvenienced."

"Yes, auntie; and if I had wiped up the water I spilled this noon, sister wouldn't have been obliged to change her dress when she was in such a hurry to get back to school; but a fellow will have to keep pretty wide-awake to remember every time;" and with a thoughtful expression on his boyish face, Will passed out of the house and toward the front gate, leisurely munching a banana as he went, but apparently engaged in deep thought.

Reaching the sidewalk, he threw down the banana skin and proceeded on his way; but presently he turned and looked hard at the yellow object lying upon the pavement, and then, quickly retracing his steps, he picked it up and flung it far into the road, where no one would be likely to slip upon it.

Turning toward the house he saw his aunt watching him from the window, and with a merry laugh he lifted his hat and bowed, while she in turn nodded approvingly.
