STRANDED IN KANSAS.

College Men Went There to Get Work as Harvesters.

A special to the New York World from St. Louis, Mo.

Stranded, 2,000 miles from New York, without money or friends, or hope of securing employment in the harvest fields, which they confidently went from New York to get, several scores of Eastern college men and women are in dire straits in the prairie towns of Western Kansas. This is the story told by Fred Nuttall, an Englishman, who passed through St. Louis tonight, burned and disheartened, on his way to New York to his wife and babies.

Nuttall came to the United States four months ago, and was immediately attracted by the advertisements for harvest hands needed in Kansas at $2.50 per day and board. He started with a party of 32, mostly college men. They landed in Topeka and were dispatched to Ness City. Nuttall originally had $10, of which after deducting railroad fare and travelling expenses, he had exactly $8 left when he landed at Ness City. Farmers were not thronging at the station to meet them and give them the expected employment. No one was on hand except the usual quota of loafers. Finally, after spending a week at a $1 a day hotel, a farmer appeared who wanted five men. Nuttall was one of those chosen. They worked for three days and were given $3 each and told they were not needed longer. When they stated that they were given to understand they would be paid $2.50 a day apiece, the farmer reminded them that he had fed and lodged them and that he had deducted $1.50 per day per man for this. Nuttall with his $3 got on the first train going east.

Sir, Thomas Lipton, that doughty English sport, who has just crossed the Atlantic to again compete for the American yachting cup, was once a poor farm laborer in South Carolina. He was the son of Scottish parents, and was born in Glasgow but ran away and came to America when quite young. After remaining in this country for a few years he returned to his native country, and borrowed money to set up a small grocery store. He now owns 420 stores in different parts of the world, 60 of them being in the city of London alone. He says: Every business idea, every successful move I have made, has been suggested to me by observation of American methods." He spends a million dollars a year in advertising his goods.

Mr. J. A. Sullivan, a talented reporter on the News and Courier's staff died suddenly Monday night with a hemorrhage, aged 27 years. He was a native of Anderson.

RACE FEELING IN THE NAVY.

White Sailors From United States War Ships Ill-treat Negroes.

(From The New York Times)

Bar Harbor, Me., July 20.—The race feeling which exists in the navy against the colored men has been cropping out here since the fleet of seven United States warships arrived. The white sailors have been making it hot for the colored men, so that the negroes have kept aboard most of the time rather than risk abuse on the streets.

On last Saturday night a number of them came ashore. At about midnight a number of Jackies got into the tent which the Naval Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association has erected on the town lot and drove out the negroes who had come there for a night's lodging. Two colored men were knocked down on Main street by a crowd of Jackies, and, after getting a few kicks and punches, scrambled to their feet and ran.

One colored man was thrown over a fence into the street. He then made his escape. Another found his way to the police station, where he was locked up to keep him away from the angry sailors, who had been chasing him. Still another rushed into a drug store, where he was put into the cellar to avoid the mob, and remained there for some time, after which he was smuggled out of a back door. Since Saturday night no colored men have come ashore from the ships after dark.

They tell a good joke on a preacher who doesn't live so far from here. While fishing one day he dropped his false teeth into the creek and after trying for an hour to fish them out he gave it up in despair. A friend of his who had attended a banquet with him heard of the loss and quietly went home and got a nice piece of roast chicken, put it on a fish hook and threw it in the creek just as though he was fishing. Well, as soon as the bait settled down near those false teeth, they made a neat spring and settled onto it with the proverbial ministerial death grip. The chicken and teeth were turned over to the parson.—Chesterfield Advertiser.

THE LONGEST WORDS

We have recently read with interest a discussion running through the papers regarding the longest words. The two words which seem to have been guilty of starting the discussion are "incircumscriptibleness" and "honorificabilitudinitas," each having 22 letters. These were soon placed in obscurity by the discovery of the word "antidisestablishmentarianism"—26 letters. Another seeker after long words rang the changes on the last named word, and made it "antidisestablishmentarianism"—28 letters—and this seems to be the longest English word yet unearthed. But after all is there any longer word than smiles, which has a mile between the first and last letters?
