

THOUGHTS FOR THE MONTH.

TIMELY TOPICS FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF PROGRESSIVE FARMERS.

What Work Should be Done During the Month of October—Valuable Suggestions from High Authority.

(W. L. Jones in Southern Cultivator). In our last, the importance of covering our fields with growing crops through the winter was discussed at some length.

Peruvian guano were regarded as the best manures for wheat and where one wishes to fertilize heavily, the substances named furnish an excellent clue to the wants of the crop.

Whether land for wheat should be very deeply broken in our climate admits of doubt. As we all know, the worst enemy of wheat is the red rust, and this is most apt to attack a crop on damp than on dry land.

And cure now. After all that has been suggested about methods of curing peas-vines, it is doubtful if any plan is superior to the old-fashioned one of curing in rail pens.

Much crab-grass hay can be saved on every farm cut when in bloom or a little after, the quality is excellent. Most of that which is usually saved is cut too late, the seeds having already formed and drawn from the stalks and leaves their most valuable contents.

Perhaps the best time to sow wheat is a week or so before the average date of a killing frost; this, of course, varies with different localities. In the northern portions of the cotton belt, it is not far from the 25th of October; towards the Gulf it approximates the middle of November.

October is usually a dry month and very favorable to the housing of crops. There would be no objection to the yard with energy; everything keeps better when put away in bulk.

Of the various anti-leaching crops, rye and vetch are the most common and the reader is urged to take the necessary steps now to raise an abundance of seed of each of them for next year's use.
