Settling A Vexed Question.

In reporting the Hear bill to regulate the Presidential succession to the House the majority of the committee on the election of Presi dent and Vice President say it is absolutely necessary to provide for the succession under circumstances now existing, leaving further and more satisfactory provisions for contingencies which may possibly and that this injunction had been arise to other measures hereafter to be proposed. As to the question of the part of the Almighty that in the advisability of changing the present law, the majority say that they are confronted by many dif-ficulties that arise in the endeavor to ascertain the constitutionality of nights. the present system. There are grave doubts as to whether the President prostem, of the Senate or are in that condition, but he says the Speaker of the House are such officers of the United States as in the meaning and intent of the Con-stitution could succeed to the Presidential office, the statutes provid ing therefor to the contrary notwithstanding. These doubts would distarb the succession under the present statutes, and would in all probability lead to a contest that would disquist the nution, unsettle business and disturb the peace of
