REVIEW OF EX-GOV. PERRY'S SKETCH OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.

When I read in the contents of the March number of "The Land W. Love," John C. Calhoun, by Ex-Governor Perry, of South Carolina, I felt very much as I should have felt had I found in the place "George Washington," by Lord North, Ex-Premier of Great Britain...

was very intimate with him. With Mr. Towns I never became acquainted, but his wife I knew in her early childhood, and held a sort of father-and-daughter-like correspondence with her for some time during her widowhood. I boarded with William C. Calhoun for about two years, while I went to school at Abbeville, and as I had something to do with the adoption of McDuffie by the brothers John, James, and William Calhoun, and as I was always as closely knit with their foster son as David was to Jonathan, their hearts and houses was ever as open to me as to their own children. I am therefore, a great deal better posted upon their public and private history than Gov. Perry possibly can be. William Calhoun while I lived with him, was as reticent of his religious opinions as his brother John; and through life, I believe, he was as free from gross vices as John, but there was a difference between them: you might live with John twenty years and never discover from his walk and conversation, that he was not a scrupulously devout man; but you could not live with William six months without discovering in his manner and conversation a number of little half-concealed signs that he was not a christian—such as sly flings at this and that frail member of the church, chucking of the exposure of their secret faults, retailing funny anecdotes of ignorant preachers,—in short, those signs which all irreligious men of respectable standing in the community are constantly showing forth of opposition to the Church and its members. Thousands of these are infidels at heart, and William Calhoun may have been one of them. I was one of them myself in my younger days. But I never heard William Calhoun openly avow infidel sentiments in all his life, and I will venture to say, that in all his life, he never tried to make one proselyte to the infidel school. Now if Wm. Calhoun made the communication just quoted, to his son-in-law, he made it in the confidence of the family circle, or with intent that Mr. Towns should use it at discretion, or with intent to unmask his brother to the world through the agency of his son-in-law.

The first supposition is the most charitable to Mr. Towns, for though it makes him a betrayer of a family secret, it still depends upon the manner in which he revealed it to Mr. Perry, whether he was a pardonable or unpardonable betrayer. If he revealed it in confidence to Gov. Perry, why then he was only unfortunate in the selection of his confidant, and is pardonable, and Gov. Perry must answer for his treachery. But if he revealed it to Mr. Perry as the known political enemy of his wife's uncle, why then he is unpardonable, and to such a degree that he is not a trustworthy witness against his uncle.

John was an infidel. I believe that he regarded the government of the children of Israel in the wilderness, the most perfect that ever existed on earth. Be that as it may, he called my attention to it more than once as exactly the government ours ought to be, or was intended to be. "There," said he, "each tribe had its place on the march, and in the camp, each managed its own concerns in its own way, neither interfering, in the slightest degree, with the private affairs of another, nor did their common head interfere with any of them in any matters save such as were of equal interest to all, and unmanageable by them as distinct and independent communities." Mr. Calhoun certainly "believed in Moses," whether he did in the prophets or not.

In 1832, Mr. Perry, became very strong, prejudiced against Mr. Calhoun, and it was not in my nature to seek the company of those I did not like. The total abandonment of his early national principles, and his zealous espousal of what he once repudiated as the "Virginia abstractions," shook my confidence in his wisdom and steadfastness of purpose in politics. I did not see how a great statesman could radically change his political principles and be both wise and sincere.

ing how the question would affect something else. This was too much his character to be a wise statesman or a safe counsellor. Whilst the advocate of a great system of internal improvement, he thought of nothing but the social and commercial blessings it bestows upon the country: He did not stop to consider, or turn to the right or left to see how such a system would strengthen the powers of the national government and crush those of the States. When he became an advocate of a tariff for protection, he thought only of building up our national independence and encouraging American labor. He did not reflect upon its sectional bearing, etc. When he became the champion of nullification, if not its author, he saw nothing more than a remedy for getting of the onerous exactions of the tariff system for protection—did not consider whether or not it would make our national Union a rope of sand.
