WHAT IS DYSPEPSIA?
A state of the stomach in which its functions are disturbed, often without the presence of other diseases, attended with loss of appetite, nausea, heartburn, sour stomach, rising of food after eating, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach, acid or fetid eructations, a fluttering or shaking at the pit of the stomach, palpitations, irritation of the senses, morbid feelings and unaccountable variations of the bowels, which is permanently cured by your favorite pills, and which is permanently cured by your favorite pills.

Constipation or Costiveness?

HEPATINE
Sick and Nervous HEADACHE?
It was at one time supposed that the seat of the brain was in the stomach. Certain it is a wonderful sympathy exists between the two, and what affects one has an immediate effect on the other. So it is that a disordered stomach invariably is followed by a sympathetic irritation of the brain, and headaches all arise from this cause. Headaches are easily cured. If you will take

HEPATINE
Sour Stomach? Heartburn?
The former is the primary cause of the latter. A sour stomach creates the heat and burning sensation. The contents of the stomach ferment and turn sour. Sick stomach, followed by griping, colic and diarrhea, often occur.

"Undying Love—An Act in Five Scenes."

"But there are two difficulties in your way. Either they will notice two stars, communicate with each other, and arrange differently, or two will meet him at the window, which would be rather awkward, and endanger a public expose."

"But you, Herbert, and Alf must detain her in a distant part of the room till I am gone. I will keep the star concealed until I see the white rose he is to wear, for he will only reach the ball-room at the appointed hour, and will enter at the door adjacent to this window."

"Well, we can but try, but, poor child how she will feel to think him false when he professed 'undying love,' as you said."

"Yes, but the good will overbalance the misery, and no one ever dies for love; besides she deserves the mortification for her indifference to such a noble fellow as Duke, who, though, he doesn't quote poetry and sentiment, loves her far more than this superficial Adam. And now, we must hurry and impart our plans to your Herbert and my Alf, so as to secure their co-operation."

SCENE III.
What is more enchanting to the lover of pleasure than the masquerade? Relieved from the stricter rules of etiquette, and allowed the full indulgence of taste and imagination, society revels in the scene "contrived by a wanton fancy, pleasure-spoilt." Bewitching forms flitted through the halls to still more bewitching music, the night after the conversation recorded above. There a dark Gypsy girl examined mysteriously the hand of the young lady while here, she passed by on the arm of a courtier of Charles II., then a gleam and glitter and a cloud of misty splendor floats by. The stars that glow, and scintillate in the radiant light, the pale crescent on her brow, proclaim the beautiful queen of night, attended by a tall watchman. This must be Leonora, for no other stars are visible, and that figure near, robed in fleecy white,—that is Clara, but no silver star glitters in her tresses, as the spirit of purity requires no ornament; and that is her lover, Alf Saymon, a distinguished man in his circle, and well does the princely crown become his noble brow. The glowing hours pass by with noiseless tread, and the hour of one draws near when Clara grows tired and must be conducted to the east window to rest. Half past twelve, fifteen to one. After escorting the queen of night to her throne at the west end of the hall, the watchman disappeared. At this time, May, attended by Herbert Langley, moves across the room to where Leonora is surrounded by several worshipers. Alf Saymon also moves in the same direction, and, making an obeisance to the queen, requests that he may have the pleasure of leading her into the dance, but she preads fatigue. Then they form a circle around her and engage in an animated conversation, though her annoyance is very evident. Leonora consulted her watch secretly, and as the time passed, became very pale. Some one noticing her pailor, she asked in a very faint voice that she might be conducted to the window on the opposite side to catch the air, but Alf insisted that it was too cool, while Herbert fanned her, and May dispatched a courtier for a glass of water. Irresolute, she was thus detained until a gentleman, who had been stationed near the window, sauntered up with a smile on his lips, which was the signal that Clara was gone. Then moving aside, Leonora passed hastily through, reached the window, looked eagerly around, glanced at her watch—ten minutes past two—surely he would have waited that long. Slowly the minutes dragged by, and at length at three o'clock the truth forced itself upon her that he had failed to come. A possibility of his deceiving her, had never entered her mind and we leave her standing at the window, staring blankly out, to see what had become of her truant lover.

SCENE V.
After leaving Leonora, the Spaniard hastened to a remote part of the city, entered his boarding house, hastened along the passages, and dashing into a room where a gentleman was reading exclaimed, "Congratulations, Edward, I'm the happiest man alive!"

Slowly raising his eyes from his book his companion said, "So you have persuaded Miss Felton to elope with you?" "Yes; to-morrow night we run away from a cruel fate that threatens to separate us."

"Alphonso," and his friend spoke seriously, now, "have you thought about what you are going to do? With the reckless dash of a boy, you are going to take a lady away from her home where she was tenderly cherished, and expose her to the vicissitudes of your fortune. What can you offer her in exchange for what she leaves? Can your companionship compensate her for all she enjoys as the petted daughter of an indulgent parent the beloved of a large circle of friends, and a stranger to sorrow? You are too thoughtless to take this responsibility on yourself. Why she should consent, I can not imagine."

"Am I so unattractive, then, that she could not love me? For it is love alone that prompts me to this act. How fortunate I am to secure such a lovely prize for which so many have sighed in vain—how proudly can I triumph over my haughty rival, Duke Sylvester."

"Suppose the young lady is flirting only thinking what might have been my sad fate had your thoughtful love not interfered!"

Then gazing in the fire for a while, she continued, "How foolish girls are! I imagined Alphonso was perfect, and believed all his promises and vows. If he ever felt the power of true love, he would not yield to such bad influences now. How different his life from what he pictured it to me when making his profession of undying love!"

WHIPPING POST FOR WIFE BEATERS.—The Board of County Commissioners, at its meeting recently passed the following order: "It is ordered that the Sheriff be, and he is hereby instructed to erect a post in a conspicuous place near the court house in the City of Austin, in accordance with the provisions of section one of the act of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, entitled 'An act to Prevent Cruelty to Women.'" The post—a large pine log—was hauled into town this forenoon and pumped in front of the court house. [Austin (Nevada) Reveille.]

Yes, that's so. All lovers who have quarreled within a few days past should "make up" right away, so that she can work him a six shilling pair of Christmas slippers, which it will cost him twenty shillings to have finished, and confidently expect a $40 set of jewelry in exchange.

"Speaking of riddles, Mr. Jones," said the landlady of a Cincinnati boarding house the other day, "can you tell the difference between a beef-steak and shingle?" "No." "Then I'll broil you a shingle hereafter every morning for breakfast instead of beefsteak." Jones has moved.

Any Nevada husband who beats his wife can be publicly flogged for the offence, but if a wife beats her husband everybody laughs.

Baltimore claims to marry off more girls than any other city in the Union. All tramps in the west take an easterly direction as they leave the gate.

Hurrying to the window, the watch man for the second time that night, offered his arm to the queen of night. Taking it mechanically, Leonora again joined the revelers, but oh! what bitter thoughts surged through her excited brain.

"No one knows it, and he dares not boast of it," she thought, and became the gayest of the gay, while Duke was only too glad to bestow the attentions she no longer disregarded. The next afternoon when they were out riding, May and Clara Forsyth, with Herbert Langley and Alf Saymour, laughed merrily over the elopement. Alf declared he felt jealous when Clara amused them with an account of her ride, and her efforts to avoid the caresses intended for Leonora.

Alphonso was too indignant to remain in the city, so left, and remained away till Leonora's visit was over, and then returned a wiser if not a sadder man.

SCENE IV.
Several years later, one evening Duke and Leonora Sylvester were sitting quietly by their fireside. They had been silent for some time, when Duke asked, "Leonora, what ever became of your lover Alphonso?"

Flushing painfully, she replied, "I neither know nor care."

He then gave her an account of Clara's elopement. She was provoked at first, but finally, it seemed so laughable, she joined in her husband's mirth.

"Duke, I didn't think you'd practice such deceit. Why did you?" "Oh you know I'd have done anything to win you, and save you from such desperate, thoughtless folly. See here, a paragraph in this paper states that Alphonso D. Clayton was arrested for being implicated in a drunken boi." Leonora was as very grave. Bending over he said in a low and tender voice, "Does my wife regret the past? is she disappointed in her second husband, only thinking what might have been my sad fate had your thoughtful love not interfered!"

Then gazing in the fire for a while, she continued, "How foolish girls are! I imagined Alphonso was perfect, and believed all his promises and vows. If he ever felt the power of true love, he would not yield to such bad influences now. How different his life from what he pictured it to me when making his profession of undying love!"

A Singular Incident in Court.

One of the strangest spectacles ever witnessed in a judicial tribunal was seen in the Supreme Court yesterday. It was the presence of six children, charged with murder, who were brought before the grave and dignified Supreme Judges upon a habes corpus. There were four boys and two girls, aged between nine and twelve years, whose names are given in the regular report of the court proceedings. These children are from Edgefield, and were represented by Messrs. J. C. and O. Sheppard, who succeeded in obtaining bail for them in the sum of $3,000.

The alleged murder took place under the following circumstances. In the vicinity of Ridge Spring, in Edgefield County, lives a Mr. Fallow, father of four and guardian of the other two children. On the 1st of December, these six children were picking cotton in a field adjacent to his house, when a negro boy about sixteen or eighteen years old, who had been warned not to come on the premises, made his appearance among them, and began to maltreat and abuse them. A general fight ensued, in which the white children succeeded in prostrating the negro, and one of them struck him with a rock in the temple. The mother of the negro interfered, and another person took charge of the white children and shielded them from the infuriated attacks of the negro's mother, until Mr. Fallow made his appearance upon the scene.

The negro boy was found to be seriously injured, and from neglect of his mother, it is alleged, he was permitted to undergo exposure, from which he died, in seven days. On Saturday last, the six white children were arrested and carried to jail in Edgefield, charged with murder, and were brought before the Supreme Court as already stated. Sheriff Gaston had charge of the children, and informed us that they had maintained the same unconscious demeanor from the outset as when we saw them before the court. No one would suspect that they were charged with crime, so innocent and listless was their appearance. It was a strange and curious spectacle, indeed, and perhaps unparalleled in the annals of South Carolina.—Columbia Register.

A man near Pittsburg, Pa., recently advertised for a book-keeper, and within twenty-four hours he had 113 applicants for the position. Subsequently he sought a man for his farm by the same means, and had eight responses. These figures represent very fairly the disproportion of laborers in the various industrial pursuits.

A lawyer made a motion in court the other day which the judge would not entertain. It was a motion to throw an ink bottle at the head of his honor.

A San Francisco man has just invented a boot making machine. He warrants that any boot it turns out will kill an ordinary man with one square kick; and the most hardened book agent with twenty.

A bride and groom from the rural "deestricks" stopped in a Springfield, Mass., restaurant the other morning, and regaled themselves to their heart's content on a wedding breakfast of pork and beans.

"Now," exclaimed an experienced and elegant exchange, "what is a kiss? Only a smack in the mouth." Except you are in a hurry and kiss about an inch too high, and then we presume, it becomes a swat in the snout.
