

The Watchman and Southron. TUESDAY, OCTOBER 18. J. A. MOOD, M. D., EDITOR. D. B. ANDERSON. YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL.

ON THE FIELD AT YORKTOWN. THE HISTORIC BATTLE-GROUND. A Hundred Years ago our Noble Ancestors Encamped and Dreamt the Dream of Liberty.

Upon these same grounds our boys will camp this week, and "play soldier," and realize at this Grand Celebration what their forefathers did for posterity and civilization.

"A people which takes no pride in the noble achievements of remote ancestors will never achieve anything worthy to be remembered with pride by remote descendants."

The Yorktown Centennial Association have purchased the Temple farm and tendered his name. A little more than a year ago the Moore House, which is on Temple farm, is handsomely carpeted and papered and tendered to the Congressional Commission for use by its guests.

The encampment for U. S. troops and State military and music societies will be on the Temple Farm, about a mile and a half distant from the historic battle-ground.

While it is the intention of the commission to furnish tents to shelter the whole command, it is questionable whether the limited amount of canvas placed at its disposal by the government will meet the demand.

Water for drinking and cooking purposes will be distributed throughout the camp in pipes. Fuel in limited amount will be placed at each companies quarters.

The exercises on these days will be under the control and direction of the Yorktown Congressional Commission, of which Senator Johnston is chairman.

A press committee, consisting of one from each of the thirteen original States has been selected to represent America at the Yorktown Centennial, and the following gentlemen have been appointed:

October 19.—The exercises on this day will be as follows: Music by the Marine Band at a little before 11 o'clock A. M., prayer, followed by the singing of the hymn entitled "The Prayer," by the chorists.

Major Hamilton, the State Commissioner, received a dispatch from Lieutenant Lee, on Friday, in which he said the detachments had reached their destination safe and in good spirits.

LATEST FROM YORKTOWN. [From Our Special Correspondent.] YORKTOWN, VA., Oct. 14. Dear Watchman and Southron: I have been looking out ever since leaving Sumner for something interesting for your readers but have seen so much Centennial that things have got somewhat mixed.

Every Depot has sprung up into a thriving country village, with an appearance of cleanliness and order so often lacking in such towns. The extensive use of commercial fertilizers and the successful cultivation of cotton.

Even Norfolk is looking bright and hopeful, though many of your readers have a distinct recollection of the place and its dreary horrors during the war. To-day, however, it looked really civilized.

It is a small, insignificant looking place, and one would never think, from its appearance, it was connected with any important events in history.

One of the most important places in a career located near the river and in front of the old Nelson House. This is called Cornwallis' Cave, and the residents here tell many stories about the uses to which it was put in Colonial days.

The managers of the N. port News extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad expected and still promise to have cars running from Richmond here by the middle of the week.

Dear Watchman & Southron: As I look upon the historic spot where O'Hara defeated Cornwallis' sword to Lincoln, I become soul-inspired, and while I am feeling patriotic, I guess, I had better let you know all about Yorktown, and the arrangements for the Centennial.

This ancient and hallowed little village has all the excitement of the approaching Centennial celebration, which occurs between the 18th and 23d instants. The little town is already crowded with visitors and persons who have booths or places of business here.

Philadelphia have erected temporary structures and other board, such as it is, for two to eight dollars per day. They will not make contracts for more than two or three days, preferring to wait for a still further rise in the price of the lumber.

One hundred dollars worth of lumber is covered in the hurricane deck, which has been closed in and tied up to make it comfortable for the sleepers.

It is a small, insignificant looking place, and one would never think, from its appearance, it was connected with any important events in history.
