Autumn. Room for King Autumn! Room! Summer, the wanton Queen, has met her doom

And died. With warlike din The rude but bounteous conqueror marches in. See, how his banners fly,

The gonfalons of cloud and stain-streak'd sky. Hark to his pipe and drum! On the fierce blast their stormy clange

They whistle and they beat O'er the wide ocean, through the narrow street; While to their terrible call

The surges mount, and tree and turret fall. His cannon on the air Flashes and roars. The signal gun! Room therel

Now he is sitting crowned; And golden sunsets beam his brows around,

And ruddy noontide hours Warm up the thin leaves of his mottled bow At night the Moon's pale face Rises before its time to do him grace.

Now plenteous fruits-not such As those before them, mouldering soon from But hardy, ripening still. For use long hence, the patient garners fill.

O! equinoctial time, Whose days are southing towards the frosty Of this strange life, in rains Of storm and wrath thy power invades; And at the ominous gale

Which Nature shakes at, a poor heart may quail; New King, be good to me! Let me thy mellow favors round me see ;

And something laid in store, When leaves have dropped, and flowers bloom And take not clean away [no more The genial glows that warmed a longer day.

Hunters' and Harvest Moon, Loth to desert and coming up so soon, . Be emblems to my mind

Of love that when most needed shows most kind And all that crimson west Breath of pavilioned hopes and ignoble re-t!

Getting off Stock at Par.

A GOOD RAILROAD STORY.

I have presumed on your interest, and that of your readers, in the works of internal improvement, to talk a good deal, quite prosily, about railroads. Nevertheless, I will venture to tax your patience with a little railroad story which a friend of mine (Hon. Robert -----) tells, as a prominent feature in his own gaining experience. When he was only a Georgia colonel, (by virtue of a law license and a very commanding figure) he was on a visit, one day, to a friend of his, one Neal Greer, in the neighborhood of Athens, Ga. It seems that about this time, the Athens Branch Railroad was in rather a shaky condition. A good deal of money had been paid in, and a good deal of work had been done; but times were getting tight, the stock holders were getting restive, (and costive,) and the road was regarded as any-thing but n "fixed fact." Perhaps the estimate had been made too low, and there was a prospect that all the money would be expended, while yet a good deal of road pleare to be drowned.

The property of the stock of the was "below par," and the holders thereof eart. Sitting in the pinzza with his old chum, Bob, (the aforesaid colonel,) Ned flood was to overflow the valley, and to ask picked up an Athens newspaper, and glan-cing at its columns, with a start, threw it suddenly down with, an oath expressive of he should never send another food upon the great disgust.

What's the mafter, Ned!" asked Bob.
"But," exclaimed the affrighted woman,
"But," exclaimed the affrighted woman,
"tis isn't God that", going to do it—it's the glared; his cheek blanched; and with his lips quivering be ejaculated;

I'll set you, Bob, if it kills me!"
And commenced to fix a small circular table, throwing off books and papers; and taking a pack of cards from a small drawer, he took a seat and invited Bob to "face"

Bob counted out $2,250 in band notes, laid them on the table, and placed a weight upon them and the scrip, and was drawing up his chair, when Mrs. Greer, much excited, rushed into the piazza. (She had been watching the proceedings of the gentlemen from a parlor window where she sat sewing.)

"Gentlemen," she exclaimed, "for heaven's sake don't go to gambling here. Remember you are old friends—school-mates—college-mates. Don't I entreat you, go to gambling with each other for large stakes

" Madam !" shouted Greer, as the perspiration streamed down his forhead, and he shook with an ague of excitement. "Madam ! go and superintend your ducks and chickens; look after your pickles and pre-serves, and your dairy, and all that—but don't interfere with my railroad stock. Don't madam," he continued, with his teeth set and hissing his words out-"don't, I say, for this is the only chance I ever had, or ever shall have, to get off the cursed stuff at par, and I'll do it or die.!"

"I implore you, then, Col.—," said the good lady, " to refuse to continue this scene. You certainly do not wish to win anything from my husband, and I am sure he does ot wish to win from you—"
"Madam!" roared Greer, "leave my railroad stock, and go look after your poultry! I tell you I'm not gambling, but I will not lose this opportunity of trading my stock off at par!

her interference only irritated her husband, and the playing commenced. Fortune vouchsafed her favors very equally for some little time, and it stood at length Bob six to Ned five, and the hands were dealt for the final struggle. Before either party, however, took up the his cards, Ned's eyes sought a farewell glance of his scrip and the bank notes, when of a sudden his expression changed, and, making a grab at the scrip, with desperate emotion, he exclaimed:

"Oh, by thunder, Bob, my stock is pretty dead, but it aint nigh us dead as that, yet ?" pointing to the roll of bills, which were the promises of the "old broken bank of Macon!" a large amount of which had come into Bob's possession professionally.

At tea that evening Bob remarked to Mrs.

Greer that she reared such quantities of poultry she ought to send her surplus to Athens to sell. "I'm afraid, Colonel D." she remarked, in a quiet way, glancing from Bob to her husband, "I should prove but a poor hand at getting my stock off at par, especially while there is so much worthless money in the country."

Bob laughed, but Ned didn't; and that's the end of the story about railroad stockexcept that I believe Greer did finally get it off at par .- Mobile Register.

"Very well," said the hungry traveller, as he turned his footsteps from the inhospitable abode, " you will want nothing to eat tomorrow.

"Why not?" inquired the woman."
"Because," answered the weary man, the Indians are digging a tunuel at Moosehead Lake, and they are going to turn all the waters of the Lake into the Aroostook valley, and you and all the rest of the peo-
