THE CARELESS WORD.

BY THE HON. MRS. NORTON.

A word is ringing through my brain:
It was not meant to give me pain;
It had no tone to bid it stay,
When other things had passed away;
It had no meaning more than all
Which in an idle hour fell;
It was, when first the sound I heard,
A lightly-uttered careless word.

It was the first, the only, one
Of those which lips forever gone
Breathed in their love—which had for me
Rebuke of harshness at my glee;
And if those lips were here to say,
"Beloved, let it pass away,"
Ah! then perchance—but I have heard
The last dear tone—the careless word.

Oh! ye who, meeting, sigh to part,
Whose words are treasures to some heart,
Deal gently, ere the dark days come,
When earth hath but for one a home;
Lest, musing o'er the past like me,
They feel their hearts wrung bitterly,
And, heeding not what else they heard,
Dwell weeping on a careless word.

Correspondence of the Courier.

LONDON, APRIL 25.

You may well imagine, Messrs. Editors, from what you see in the London papers which I send you by this steamer, that there is little else thought of here but the Great Exhibition which now engrosses the attention of every one. I experienced, however, a feeling of disappointment at the first sight of the Crystal Palace—a feeling similar to that felt on approaching the Pyramids of Egypt; but this feeling was succeeded by one of astonishment, on a nearer view of the exterior of the immense structure, and more on entering it and beholding its vast proportion and dazzling splendor. I shall not attempt a description of it, for no description can possibly come up to the reality; its dimensions, however, are—length 1848 ft. Width 108 Height 66 feet. The transept 108 feet high. Iron Columns 3230 ft. Iron Girders 2244. Iron Beams 1128. 34 miles of Gutter. 900,000 feet of Glass. Gallery 24 feet wide. Site 18 acres. The contract is for £79,800, or £130,000 if the building is retained.

Through the kindness of friends, I have been enabled to visit the building repeatedly, and although every thing is in comparative confusion, and thousands of workmen busily engaged in completing and decorating the edifice, and in fitting up and arranging the multifarious objects intended for exhibition, yet a very good opening is afforded to examine those massive ones, many of which are already in their places, that are likely to attract universal attention.

It has been officially announced, within a few days, that the Exhibition will be opened by Her Majesty, the Queen, on the first day of May, the time originally named for the purpose; and although there is a vast deal to be done, to get every thing in readiness, there is not the least doubt that this intention will be carried out. It is supposed that there may be some fifteen thousand persons present in the building to witness this imposing and grand ceremony, admitted by tickets at two and three guineas each, which will alone furnish a handsome proportion of the expense of its erection. The subdivisions of the building have been judiciously made to accommodate all the various nations which have intimated their intention of submitting any of their works of art, manufactures, or products at this great international fair. The western end of the palace is appropriated to the reception and display of the works of British artists and manufactures; the east end to those from the United States, and the intermediate divisions to the nations of the East and of Europe. France and Germany are like to take the lead in the beauty and elegance of their productions, whilst England will probably be but little, if any, behind them in this respect, and will most likely exceed them in the substantial value and durability of many of their fabrics. It is not to be expected that our own country is at all prepared at this early period to compete with them in the finer descriptions of manufactures or of objects of art, but in many of the articles of utility and general usefulness, I think we shall be able to compare advantageously with any of them. In agricultural implements, the display of which will be large and imposing, we shall very far exceed any and all of them; and in various other descriptions of manufactures, if we do not excel, we shall at least be enabled to compare very respectfully with them, considering that our country is as yet but in its infancy, although that infancy is a herculean one. On my first visit to the exhibition, I naturally looked for those particular objects, which I knew had been sent from our own City and State, and conspicuous among the number, were the Cyprus Canoe, and the little Pony Pheton, which had obtained the premium at the Fair last autumn in Charleston; and in a lot of bags of Cotton from the South, the name of "W. Hampton" and "W. Sealbrook" were conspicuous. It will fill a large volume merely to enumerate the names of the various articles which will be on exhibition, and any attempt, therefore, to describe them in a letter, would be useless.

The collection of Saturday, in the department of the arts, will be very large, and the number there are many more beautiful than I have ever seen, with some few rare exceptions. But the number of Bronze figures will exceed beyond all comparison, any which have heretofore been collected together for public exhibition—two or three are particularly good and imposing—one, a colossal Lion, moulded in brass; another a Bronze Amazon, mounted upon a powerful horse, and attacked by a ferocious tiger, which has fastened itself upon the breast and neck of the noble animal, whilst the Amazon is in the act of plunging a javelin in the head of the tiger; these are admitted on all hands, to be amongst the most imposing and beautiful objects in the whole exhibition—the former is from Munich, the latter from Berlin; there are likewise, in the same group, two stags as large as life, which are equally the objects of general admiration. But in the department of the arts, pre eminent above all others, will be found the masterpiece of the great Slavey our gifted countryman, Powers. It will probably be recollect that the one exhibited in America was a copy by the same eminent artist, the original having been sold to an English gentleman, who kindly sends it to the exhibition—he values it so highly that an offer of a very large sum, made to him by Prince Albert for it, has been declined.

Foreigners admitted by privilege tickets to witness the development and arrangement of the various objects to be exhibited at the Fair, have hitherto been excluded from that portion of the building assigned to the subjects of Great Britain, but to-day I was permitted to take a stroll through it. As might be expected, the exhibitors in this division are in a greater state of forwardness for the display than other nations many of whose articles have but very recently reached England, and they are indeed upon a very large and imposing scale. The most distinguished manufacturing concerns throughout the three kingdoms have fitted up the most showy stalls and subdivisions: in the space allotted them, and decorated them in the handsomest manner, in which to display their various fabrics, and the effect will be to give them a decided advantage. The display of coaches and carriages is most extensive, embracing every description of carriage, whether useful or ornamental, that has ever been seen, and the various makers throughout the kingdom seem to have spared no labor or expense in producing the most substantial as well as the most grandly vehicles that can well be conceived. The consequence is, that this department will exceed in numbers at least all that will be offered for inspection by all the other nations represented at the Fair. Their specimens, also, of locomotive engines and passenger cars, will be enabled to walk over the course, as I see none present from any other country—those on exhibition of British fabrics are indeed beautiful specimens of the manufacturing art. The immense Telescope of Lord Ross will also adorn this division of the palace.

It has been thought, considering the immense number employed in the erection of this gigantic edifice and the manner and mode in which it is constructed, necessarily exposing them to accidents, it is fortunate that but two lives have been lost in the whole operation.—The last of these fatal accidents occurred a day or two since. A man engaged in repairing some of the glass work of the roof lost his balance, and falling through the floor below, was almost instantly killed. Some difficulty has been found to keep the roof of the palace from leaking, the materials of which it is composed being so liable to contract and expand—the consequence is, that the goods are very liable to be damaged, and to prevent which some of the exhibitors have erected over their respective divisions a canopy of transparent oiled silk or paper, which serves not only to secure them from any falling drops of water, but from dust also. To remedy this difficulty, however, as well as to prevent the too strong rays of the sun upon the sloping roofs of the edifice from creating too great a degree of heat within, the contractors yesterday commenced covering the entire roof with glazed white cloth, which will no doubt have the desired effect.

The government and people generally, have evinced a commendable disposition to afford all the facilities possible, to enable strangers to witness everything of an interesting character in and about London on this occasion; and the American Minister, who is called upon by most of our countrymen, on their arrival, is ever ready to extend his advice and assistance in any and every way in which he can afford them aid. The number yet arrived is not so great as it was generally supposed would be presented at the opening of the fair, but there is very little doubt that we shall be fully represented before it is over.

The official programme of the ceremonies to be observed on the opening of the Great Exhibition, by her Majesty, will be found in the London papers of yesterday morning—they will no doubt be of the most grand and imposing character; and the immense assemblage of fifteen thousand ladies and gentlemen, besides, I suppose, as many thousand of attendants who will be admitted as exhibitors to the exhibition and their assistants, all congregated under one immense roof, where a very large proportion of those will be able to see each other, and the distinguished parties appertaining to the Court and of the Diplomatic Representatives of the various nations present, will present a spectacle, I should suppose, unsurpassed by any thing of the kind which has been before seen in the world.

The ex Queen of France, relict of Louis Philippe, with several members of her family, were present at the Crystal Place yesterday, and of course, attracted much observation—what a sad change in their destiny, from the period when she presided over the splendors of the Palace of the Tuilleries.

The busy note of preparation is every where heard in making arrangements for opening the various places of exhibition and amusement which are specially dedicated to what is here termed "the season," commencing with May day. It is predicted that the season this year will be a short one—that the nobility and gentry will be away to the country earlier than usual, to avoid the noise and bustle which London is expected to present when it shall be thronged with foreign visitors.

Yours, &c. A TRAVELLER.
