

we must see what are the evils complained of: we must find out and examine the causes of "our wide spread disaffection;" we complain that the provisions of the Constitution have been disregarded, and the rights of the Southern people trampled under foot by the passage of the Compromise measures; we contend that there is an unruly spirit of fanaticism raging at the North, which has for its object, the utter extinction of the Institution of negro slavery in these United States, and at all events, a deep, settled determination on the part of all Northern men, conservative or fanatic, to circumscribe the area of this Institution. The South complains of the utter impossibility of recovering a fugitive from labor, without incurring hazard and expense greater generally, than the value of the slave—in one or two instances it has cost $2,000, since the passage of the Compromise Fugitive Slave Bill, and before its enactment, the attempt to recover his property, cost a respectable citizen of Maryland, his life.) The forms of the Constitution continually used by the North to violate its spirit; and finally, the utter impossibility of our ever being able to save ourselves, since all the power is in the hands of the men of the North. This is a hasty summary of the catalogue of grievances which it is deemed necessary to resist. The vast majority of the citizens of this State believe, that we have had insults and indignities sufficient, heaped upon us, to justify us in resorting to resistance. They are ripe for the reception of any remedy which will effectually redress their wrongs, or give them security for the future. SECESSION.—The Separate Solitary Secession of South Carolina, is prescribed as the remedy for the ills of the South. Now will this cure the evils? I ask any one: our avowed object is to obtain redress for past grievances, or security for the future. And first, do we obtain redress? Does any man suppose that the erection of South Carolina into an independent Republic, will induce Texas to disgorge that ten million of dollars? Will it remind California back to her territorial condition? Will it make it easier for us to recover a fugitive from labor? I imagine no one is vain enough, to suppose that any of these results will follow. Now will it be likely, to aid greatly, in restoring that equilibrium between the South and North, which Mr. Calhoun contended had been destroyed by the action of the Government? Yet it is only by undoing these things, that we can expect redress for past grievances; our Secession, peaceable or bloody, will not bring about that result; nobody supposes it will. Will it give us security for the future? That is, will it place us in such a position, that our Liberty will be safe, and our Slave Institutions perpetuated?

Let us examine this very briefly. Now by our Secession, we will become a foreign State, and that ill-fated day on which we pass the great Ordinance of Secession, will begin the operation of all the laws of the United States against us, which are in force against other Foreign Nations. It will be piracy, and punishable with death, for a citizen of the Republic or Kingdom of Carolina, to carry his slave into North Carolina or Georgia, by the Law of Nations. Here then, we will have our whole slave population penned up within the narrow compass of this little State. We have more slaves in the State now, in proportion to our size, than any other Southern State, in 25 or 30 years it is calculated they will double their number. It has been indeed shown in some way or other by "Rutledge" (who says they will double in 40 years) that instead of being too many, they are just the number which, when all our irreclaimable swamps shall be drained, and our barren sand hills become fertile, and bring forth, the Lord knows how many bushels of wheat to the acre! In fact, we would recommend this writer, lately republished in the Journal, as a practical exemplification, of that common operation, called "cutting one's own throat," or giving a man a stick to break one's own head with. In using his statistics, and in quoting his "Say," it is singular that this passage should not have struck him: "In France, the minister of the interior, in his expose of 1813, a most disastrous year, when foreign commerce was destroyed, and the national resources of every description rapidly declining, boasted of having proved by indubitable calculations, that the country was in a higher state of prosperity than it ever had been before" (Say Pol. Econ.) And so great a political economist could not have forgotten, that the great Adam Smith said "the put so great faith in political arithmetic."

To regain South Carolina in 30 years will have her slaves penned up on her own soil, doubled in number, too many to consume, and a large part of the State in which slaves are not now needed, consequently will be few in number, and thus with her commerce crippled, if not totally ruined, her people oppressed with the weight of heavy taxes, instead of maintaining a proud position among the Nations, we will have war, and famine, and desolation in all our borders. Then will be heard, in our very midst, the deadly whispers of the demon of Abolition. It requires not the eye of a prophet, or any keen knowledge of the future, to see that all the internal pangs are ready, the victims prepared. All are here: they but await the fatal act of Secession, and Carolina for a short, a very short while, will be the battle-field, and then the Tomb of her sons. If we should indeed take this fatal step of Secession, History will not be able on all her ample pages, to show its mournful parallel. If I color the picture too highly, it must at least be granted, that it will hardly perpetuate the Institution of Slavery, which is the only point, at present in issue. Is Secession then, with all its probable horrors, and all its uncertainties, a desirable thing in itself? We would answer, no! And then we are told: "you may talk as you please of civil war, and heavy taxes, and annihilation, and death, better these: Better be, "Where the extinguished Spartan still is free, In his proud charnel of Thermopylae." In short, "while heaven has light, and earth has graves, Carolinians, never will be slaves." "Better anything than Submission."

Submission! "that dreadful polysyllable." Let us see who are the Submission men, if the term indeed has a meaning, or is only used as a bug-bear to frighten. "When the multitude are to be dealt with, there is a charm in sound" says Archdeacon Paley; but I trust no thinking man can be swerved from the strong convictions of his judgment, by a mere unmeaning epithet. "Tis the eye of Childhood that fears the painted devil." Ye are men! But let us meet the term as we find it used, and see whose head the cap fits, if either. What can more strongly indicate a determination to submit to what Congress has done, than our withdrawal from the Union? we can't pretend by it to resist the past legislation; but to avoid the future legislation of Congress. The "fiercest spirit" that figured in the May Convention, the most enthusiastic toast-maker on the 4th of July, does not propose to fight for Carolina's share of the Territory. Now we must do one of two things, in relation to this matter. We must either resist the action of Congress, or submit to it? Does peaceable Secession resist it? by no means. Don't we base, in speeding, our only hope of co-operation, on the fact or fancy, that the General Government will coerce us? The truth is, that Secession is as much submission, as Co-operation, and the term signifies nothing, when applied to a Resistance man, whether he be for resistance by Co-operation, or Secession. So much for the word Submission. There are some men who admit the extreme danger which will wait upon Secession, but are afraid, if we delay, that the spirit of our people will be lowered, and they will hug their chains, and become insensible to the degradation of their position. In short, that the descendant of the Anglo-Saxon will fall in love with Despotism. We will consider this in our next. KERSHAW.

TELEGRAPHIC ITEMS.
New York, Sept. 24.—The steamer Africa has arrived from Liverpool with 144 passengers.

Cotton has advanced 1-8 during the week. The sales were 50,500 bales, of which speculators took 10,400, and exporters 8,800. Business at Manchester was good.

There had been a severe gale on the English coast, and many vessels had been wrecked.

ADDITIONAL BY THE AFRICA.
