SONG FOR LABOR.

The workshop must be crowded
That the palace may be bright;
If the ploughman did not plough,
Then the poet could not write.
Then let every toil be hallowed
That man performs for man,
And have its share of honour,
In the universal plan.
See, light darts down from heaven,
And enters where it may;
The eyes of all earth's people
Are cheered with one bright day.
And let the mind's true sunshine
Be spread o'er earth as free,
And fill the souls of men
As the waters fill the sea.
Ye men who hold the pen,
Rise like a band inspired,
And, poets, let your lyrics
With hope for man be fired;
Till the earth becomes a temple,
And every human heart
Shall join in one great service,
Each happy in his part.

THE STORMING OF STONY POINT.
The night had already settled down gloomy and foreboding, on the evening of the 15th of July, 1779, when the advancing column of a little army, whose uniform betokened it to be American, emerged from a thick wood on the shore of the Hudson, and in an instant the whole dim and shadowy prospect disclosed to the eyes of the British, the high and dark other side of the river, dark, gloomy, and frowning, rose up the craggy heights of Stony Point. Washed on three sides by the Hudson, and protected on the other, except along a narrow road, by a morass, the fort was deemed one of the most impregnable on the river; and its capture regarded as most impossible. Yet to achieve that gallant purpose, this little army was now upon its march.

A turn in the road soon hid them from the river, and after a silent march of some minutes duration, they arrived within a mile and a half of the enemy's lines, and halting at the command of their officer, formed into columns for the attack. Beginning again their march, they soon reached the marshy ground at the base of the hill.
"Hist!" said the low voice of the General, front: "We are nigh enough now—halt."
The order was passed in a whisper down the line, and the column paused on the edge of a morass. It was a moment of suspense and peril. Every man felt that in a few minutes the fate of their hazardous enterprise would be determined, and that they would be either cold in death, or the American flag waving in triumph over the dark promontory ahead, now scarcely discernible through the thick gloom of midnight. Yet not a lip quivered nor a cheek blanched in the crisis. About twenty paces in front of the column, had halted the forlorn hope of one hundred and fifty men, with unloaded pieces and bayonets fixed, while farther on a small group of shadowy forms could be seen through the obscurity, recouered with axes to cut through the abatis. Each man had a piece of white paper in his hat to distinguish him from the foe in the approaching mele. The pause, however, which afforded this prospect was but momentary. The General had already reconnoitered the approaches to the still silent promontory, and waving his sword on high, he gave the order. In another instant, the dark, massive column was moving steadily to the attack.

It was a thrilling moment, during which that devoted band had passed rapidly over the marsh. As yet the enemy had not discovered them—the hearts of the oldest veterans trembled with eagerness of that moment of suspense. Already had the foremost of the pioneers reached the abatis, and the quick, rapid blows of their axes rung upon the night, when suddenly a shout of alarm broke from the fort, the gun of a sentry flashed through the gloom, and in an instant all was uproar and confusion within the astonished fortification. Not a moment was then to be lost.
"Advance! advance!" shouted Wayne, as he passed rapidly on towards the abatis, followed in deathlike silence by the indomitable troops.
"To arms!" came home on the night breeze from the fort—"to arms!" and the shout followed the quick roll of the drum. In an instant the enemy were at their posts, and as the gallant continentals still maintained their silent but steady march, a fire such as only desperation could produce, burst from every embrasure of the fort. The incessant rattle of the musketry, the roar of artillery, the crashing of the grape shot, and the lurid light flung over the scene by the explosion of the shells, and the streams of fire pouring from the fort, formed a picture which no pen can describe. Yet, admit it all, the daring assailants steadily advanced, though not a trigger had been pulled in their ranks. Faithful to the commands of their general, though trembling in every limb with eagerness, they kept up their silent march, amid the fiery tempest, as if impelled by some god-like power. On, on, they pressed. The whirlwind of fire from the fort ceased not; yet still they dashed along, charged at the point of the bayonet, over abatis and bulwark, until the enemy, borne back by their impetuous onset, quailed before them. The works were forced. Then, and not till then, was the death-like silence broken. A sound rang out from the victorious troops over all the thunder of the battle. It was heard by the head of the column behind; it passed down their line, was caught up by the rear, and a wild shout, making the very welkin tremble, rang out as they dashed on attack.

The contest was short, but terrific. Over bulwark, battery, and prostrated foes the gallant continentals, headed by Wayne, pressed, driving all before them, met the column of their little army, with enthusiastic cheers, in the very centre of the enemy's works. In another moment the starry flag of America waved triumphantly over the battlements.
The enthusiasm of the victors cannot be described. But though the contest had been so bloody, not a man of the enemy fell, after resistance ceased. The prisoners were disarmed, a guard placed over them, and sentries posted on all the commanding positions around the works. The morning gun announced to the British fleet in the river that STONY POINT WAS WON.

HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.—On the 18th inst. the Hudson River Railroad, from New York to Albany, was opened through its whole length, and was inaugurated without the Presidential presence. By the way, this custom is a recent French importation, and therefore should not be encouraged. The Herald says: "The New York and Albany Railroad was opened with great eclat, and a train, laden with seven cars, filled to overflowing with passengers, after stopping at Hudson, Poughkeepsie, and Peekskill, and being delayed for some time in taking in wood and water, performed the distance from Albany to Thirty-first street, New York, in three hours and forty minutes. This time has not, that we are aware of, been equalled for such a long distance.
"The time made by the New York engine, on the 14th inst., was also considered more than nine miles, on the old road, the speed exceeded fifty miles an hour. But what a change has taken place in the speed of travelling within the recollection of many persons now living! In 1840, it took three days by the accommodation stage to reach Albany, for which the fare was $3. In May, 1841, the steamboat Fulton made a passage from New York to Albany in eighteen hours twenty-five minutes. This was regarded as wonderful. Now it can be done with ease in three hours and twenty-five minutes, by the Iron Horse."

THE PLAGUE.
A Havana correspondent of the Picayune gives an account of the plague which is now raging in the Canary Islands. Trade and amusements have been paralyzed before it. It was feared that the negro traders would bring disease into Cuba. Below we extract some parts of the ravages of this terrible destroyer:
"History does not record anything so sad as the spectacle which the Island of Grand Canary has presented, and still presents. The best directed pen attempts in vain to relate such misfortunes and horrors, and words would not be sufficient to depict their intensity.
"The epidemic now raged with such fury that the inhabitants in consternation abandoned the town, without caring for anything but their persons, to such an extent that they even forgot the ties of blood. Death surprised them in the midst of their flight, so that the roads were covered with corpses, over which not a tear of friendship, or of filial or fraternal love was shed, because terror had smothered every sentiment except that of self-preservation. As was to be expected, the fugitives, carrying with them the fatal germ, infected the country, which became the theatre of the most horrible scenes.
"The beasts, abandoned in the city, perished for want of food, and the decomposition of their bodies, together with that of the human corpses which remained unburied in the streets, vitiated the air to such an extent that any unfortunate person who might return to the city fell dead almost as soon as he entered a house.
"This terrible plague of the Moors was introduced into the Island of Grand Canary by the fishing vessels which frequent the western coasts of Africa. The persons in the island devoted to this traffic, numbering about 1,800, have almost perished, as there remain only enough to man a single vessel. According to the declarations of the masters of the said vessels, on all the western shores of Africa there reigns a deadly pest which carries off the inhabitants, the mortality being so great that the corpses are strewn upon the earth in incredible numbers, and their decomposition augments the influence of the corrupted atmosphere.
"In order to give an idea of the ravages of the pest, it is only necessary to state that in two months 6,000 died in the city of Las Palmas, and 16,000 in the whole island. Up to the last dates the plague had spared the towns of Agate and Fejeda.
"At the last dates, August 12, the epidemic abated considerably in the city, though it still raged in the country."
