BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.

Oh, if there is one law above the rest,
Written in Wisdom—if there is a word
That I would trace as with a pen of fire,
Upon the unsullied temper of a child—
If there is anything that keeps the mind
Open to angel visits, and repels
The ministry of ill—'TIS HUMAN LOVE.
God has made nothing worthy of contempt:
The smallest pebble in the well of truth
Has its peculiar meanings, and will stand
When man's best monuments wear fast away.
The law of Heaven is Love; and though its name
Has been usurped by passion, and profaned
To its unholy uses through all time,
Still, the eternal principle is pure;
And in these deep afflictions that we feel,
Omnipotent with us, can we see
The lavish measure in which love is given,
And in the yearning tenderness of a child—
In every bird that sings above our head
And every creature feeding on the hills,
And every tree and flower, and running brook,
We see how everything was made to love,
And how they err, who in a world like this,
Find any thing to hate but human pride.

From the London Times.

VISIT TO THE CRYSTAL PALACE BY MOONLIGHT.

To those who have seen the interior during the day time filled with thousands of spectators, and agitated by all the bustle of sight-seeing, it is difficult to realize the aspect which the same scene presents when the crowds have departed, when the gates are closed, and the police have taken under their entire control that vast collection of the trophies of human industry. One can scarcely comprehend the strength of that confidence in the law and in the security of property which reconciles fifteen thousand exhibitors, gathered from every civilized country in the world, speaking different languages, and brought up under different forms of government, to trust the most valued evidences of their skill, their wealth, or their enterprise, night after night, to a body of about fifty police men, paid little above the ordinary wages of labor, and armed against dangers from without with no weapon more formidable than a baton. A Russian jeweller is the only person we have heard of as showing any uneasiness in the exercise of this confidence. He wanted to be convinced that his diamonds were safe, and accordingly he applied for an order to visit them by night. His request was granted, and he soon had a practical test of the watchful care taken of his property.

Standing in front of his glass case, and satisfying himself that all was safe, he happened to turn round, and there to his astonishment he found that he had a constable at either elbow superintending his movements, and by no means disposed from their looks to take his honesty for granted. We visited the Crystal Palace two nights ago, but in a less sceptical spirit than the Russian jeweller, and for a different purpose. We wished to see the aspect of the interior under the influence of a clear moonlight to observe how each object of interest varied in expression when looked at through a new medium, to contrast with the bustle and thronging excitement of the day, the effects of silence, solitude, and darkness. Let the reader accompany us in our survey, and share in the impressions which it produced. Entering by the south transept, shortly before 10 o'clock, the moon, now nearly full, was shining through its arched and transparent roof. Standing in deep shadow MacDowall's Eve was seen, among other objects, upon the left, looking more beautiful in form from the surrounding obscurity. In the centre every thing was plainly revealed, the pinnacles of the crystal fountain appeared tipped with silver, and in the basin below, the ribs and sash bars overhead, and the sky beyond them, and portions of the adjacent galleries, and the occasional glimmer of gas-lights, were all reflected with marvellous distinctness. The jets of the fountain no longer played, and the stillness of all around was unbroken. An air of solemn repose pervaded the vast area; the very statues seemed to rest from the excitement of the day, and to slumber peacefully on their pedestals. Some were enveloped in white coverings, which in the doubtful light gave them a sufficiently ghostly appearance; others remained unprotected from the chilling night air, and braved exposure to cold, as they have already, we hope, successfully done to criticism.

At one point of intersection between the nave and transept, Virginius, under the flare of a gas lamp from the China compartment, brandished the knife with which he had sacrificed his daughter. At another, corner and under a similar dispensation of light from Persia, a cavalier leaned upon his sword, and appeared to be calculating the number of people that had passed him during the day. Of Turkey and Egypt we could see only at the entrance the faint glitter of Damascus blades and of broad-edged muslins and trappings. All beyond was lurid in darkness and mystery. The shades of night, too, fell heavily upon Greece, Spain, and Italy, though behind them through the open girders beams of unexplained light were seen rising. The zinc statue of the Queen rested in grateful obscurity, and Lenoniere's jewel-case had cautiously been stripped of its attractions. On the metal pipes of Da Croquet's organ some struggling moon beams played, though without evoking any sound. The colossal group of Cain and his family looked well in a gloom which seemed suited to his expression of guilt qualified by the traces of human affection. So it was all down the eastern nave. The shadows of night, which fell heavily on some points, were strangely relieved at intervals by gas, which carried the eye forward over intervening objects to those immediately around it. Instead of looking at those things which lay nearest, attention was directed to distant and out of the way spots, brought into prominence by the light streaming upon them. Where during the day one would notice a specimen of wood carving, or a collection of bronzes or pottery, his sight was attracted to the name of some country suspended above its products, or to the undersides of gallery floor-boards, rendered slightly by Owen Jones plan of decoration. Policemen in list slippers might occasionally be seen flitting noiselessly to a point whence the strangers might be reconnoitered, or suddenly emerging from behind some dark object where they had remained for a time cautiously stowed away. If a court was entered or a divergence made to the right or to the left, the quick eyes and the scarcely discernible footfall of some member of "the force" followed. Over the whole interior a profound silence reigned, broken only at intervals as the clocks of the building rang out slowly the advancing hour. Turning towards the western hall of the interior, huge envelopes of calico concealed most of the objects facing the nave, but the large trophies in the centre remained uncovered, and looked solemn and grand in the neutral light which prevailed. The Indian suits of mail, and the model prahus of the East, were favored by the beams of the moon. The chandeliers of Apsley Pell it and Co caught the eye in passing, and glistened as if anxious to have their illuminating properties tested. Adornments were again caught of remote galleries brought into prominence by gas lamps. In some places light shone, though whence it came appeared a mystery. In others there was almost a total darkness. The contributions to the carriage department were swathed in calico, while the gigantic locomotives disdained any covering, and rested in grim repose. The activity of mules, spinning-frames, and looms was hushed, the wind of driving wheels was silent, and amidst the whole of that usually noisy department dedicated to machinery in motion, the only sound we heard was that of a cricket chirping away merrily amidst Wattworth's tools. We have sketched faintly and rapidly the aspect of the Crystal Palace as seen by night when descended by all the crowds that throng its pillared aisles during the day, and left alone in its glory. The contrast thus presented cannot be adequately appreciated by any description; but were the privilege which we have enjoyed not very sparingly used, it is highly probable that the Russian jeweller would have many other exhibitors adopting his fears and imitating his example in testing them.

EVIL COMPANY.—The following beautiful allegory was translated from the German: Sophronius, a wise teacher, would not suffer even his grown up sons and daughters to associate with those whose conduct was not pure and upright. "Dear father," said the gentle Eudalia to him one day, when he forbade her, in company with her brother, to visit the volatle Lucinda, "dear father, you must think us very childish, if you imagine that we should be exposed to danger by it." The father took in silence a dead coal from the hearth, and reached it to his daughter. "It will not burn you my child; take it." Eudalia did so, and beheld! her delicate white hand was soiled and blackened, and as it happened, her white dress also. "We cannot be too careful in handling coals," said Eudalia in vexation. "Yes, truly," said her father; "you see my child that coals even if they do not burn, blacken. So it is with the company of the vicious."

A FOX'S REVENGE.

The Rev. I. Murray, in his work on Creation, tells the following story:

"An old and respectable man of the county of Montgomery, used frequently to relate an anecdote of a circumstance which he saw. In his youth he resided on the banks of the Hudson river. One day he went to a bay on the river in order to shoot ducks or wild geese. When he came to the river he saw six geese beyond shot. He determined to wait for them to approach the shore. While sitting there, he saw a fox come down to the shore and stand some time and observe the geese. At length he turned and went into the woods, and came out with a very large bunch of moss in his mouth. He then entered the water very silently, sank himself, and then keeping the moss above the water, himself concealed, he floated among the geese. Suddenly one of them was drawn under water, and the fox soon appeared on shore with the goose on his back. He ascended the bank and found a hole made by the tearing up of a tree. This hole he cleared, placed in the goose, and covered it with great care, strewing leaves over it. The fox then left, and while he was gone, the hunter unburied the goose, closed the hole, and resolved to await its issue. "In about half an hour the fox returned with another in company. They went directly to the place where the goose had been buried, and threw out the earth. The goose could not be found. They stood regarding each other for some time, when suddenly the second fox attacked the other most furiously, as if offended by the trick of his friend. During the battle he shot them both."

WHAT A GENTLEMAN MAY DO AND WHAT HE MAY NOT DO.—He may carry a brace of partridges, but not a leg of mutton. He may be seen in the omnibus box at the opera, but not on the box of an omnibus. He may be seen in a stall inside the theatre, but not at a stall outside of one. He may dust another person's jacket, but not brush his own. He may kill a man in duel, but he must not eat peas with a knife. He may thrash a coalheaver, but he must not ask twice for soup. He may pay his debts of honor, but need not trouble himself about his tradesmen's bills. He may drive a horse as a jockey, but he must not exert himself in the least to get his lining. He must never forget what he owes to himself as a gentleman, but he need not mind what he owes as a gentleman to his tailor. He may do anything, or any body, in fact, within the range of a gentleman—go through the Insolvent Debtor's Court, or turn billiard maker, but he must never on any account carry a brown paper parcel, or appear in the streets without a pair of gloves.

EUREKA.—It is almost needless to say that the following very clever solution of one of the most difficult and prettiest enigmas we have ever encountered, is by a lady: Messrs. Editors of the true Delta—With your permission I will respond to a challenge you gave your readers yesterday, as follows: Cipher this, if you Can.—The last New York Albion received contains the following, and promises the key in the next issue: Dr. Whewell's reply to a lady who requested his autograph or cypher— You 0 my 0, but I 0 thee— Then 0 no 0, but ah! 0 me— Let not my 0 a 0 go— Give back 0 0 I love thee so. Let us first give Dr. Whewell's lines literally: You cipher my cipher, but I cipher thee— Then cipher no cipher, but ah! cipher me— Let not my cipher a cipher go— Give back cipher cipher I love thee so! Now let us take a little of the poet's license. You sigh for my cipher, but I sigh for thee— Then sigh for no cipher, but ah! sigh for me— Let not my sigh for a cipher go— Give back sigh for sigh, for I love thee so. And now, gentlemen, methinks we need not sigh for the "next issue" of the Albion.—N. O. Trac Delta.

ECONOMY IN CANDLES.—If you are with out a rush light, and would burn a candle all night unless you use the following precaution, it is ten to one an ordinary candle will gutter away in an hour or two, sometimes to the endangering the safety of the house. This may be avoided, by placing as much common salt, finely powdered as will from reach the tallow to the bottom of the black part of the wick of a partly burnt candle, which, if the same be lit, will burn very slowly, yielding sufficient light for a bedchamber; the salt will gradually sink as the tallow is consumed, the melted tallow being drawn through the salt, and consumed in the wick.—Economist.

HINTS FOR PIANISTS.—Have your piano-forte tuned at least four times a year by an experienced tuner. If you let it go too long without tuning, it usually becomes flat, and troubles a tuner to get it to stay at concert pitch, especially in the country. Never place the instrument against the outside wall, or in a cold damp room, particularly in a country house. There is no greater enemy to a piano-forte than damp. Close the instrument immediately after you practice; by leaving it open dust immediately fixes on the sound-board, and corrodes the movements; and if in a damp room the strings must rust. Should the piano-forte stand near, or opposite a window, guard if possible, against it being opened, especially on a wet or damp day. When the sun is on the window, close the blinds. Avoid putting metallic or other metals on, or in the piano-forte; such things frequently cause unpleasant vibrations, and sometimes injure the instrument. The more equal the temperament of the room, and the less soft pedal is used, the better the piano will stand in tune.

What a curious being a printer is. He stands when he sets and sets when he stands, and when he wishes to set with ease he always stands erect. It is, however, the nature of the case which causes him to stand.

AMERICAN PRINTS. I have now on hand a stock of EAST COLORED Calicoes, that for variety, beauty and cheapness, will bear comparison with any stock in the Southern country.
