Tis a comely, sober bird—the goose! We acknowledge its usefulness when We take our rest, or its plumes we use, To form the needful pen.

Toss high your caps for the gray goose quill, Ye printer lads so stout-

For the gray old magician, your purses that fill, Awaken your merriest shout.

And "learned limbs of the law," do not Think the theme beneath your skill-For of a certainty you'd be forgot, Were it not for the gray goose quill!

Senators famous, learned, and wise, Whose speeches whole columns fill-If this should meet your sober eyes, Add your cheers for the gray goose quill. Ladies! by no means be carelessly mute, Let the music of your voices still-The men who govern the press salute, And its servant, the gray goose quill.

Let ev'ry one shout for the gray goose quill, Till echoe repeats but one word-And let every one a humper fil

To the health of the Roman bird! We'll pledge the health of the sober bird, And our shouting will e'en express, The hopes that the old gray quills have stirred In every mortal breast!

WINNING A HEART. BY D. W. BARTLETT.

It was not long ago that I was chatting place. with my blue-eyed consin Adele, about story-writing, when she gave me the following as she gave them, that perhaps they would only excite in me a smile, but that a woman's heart would understand them. I took the extracts and read the follow-

"Adele!-I am here in my little room, over-looking the stream upon whose bank you and I have lain for many a sweet hour. It plays the same old tune, and it glides just as last as it used to do. And flowers overhang its banks, and tremble upon its bosom.

The trees are all blossoming, for to-day is May-day, and the children are wild with joy. I am alone now as the sun is setting, and I wish you were here. There is a new comer in our little village. A week ago today, a young man by the name of Henry Davenport engaged rooms for the season at the village hotel. Uncle William was introduced to him in New York, last winter, but knows nothing more of him. He invited him to Agatha's party, and we girls had him presented to us. He is very handsome—and what is better, has a noble soul. There is, however, a look of defiance upon his face-and not a little pride in his heart, has been the origin of a party of conspirators among us girls, and we are bound to conquer his heart. Our names are written in due order, and we are each to take our regular turn at trying to win his heart, and report progress to the band. Now we are only in sport, but I guess we will show Mr. Davenport that he is not so independent as he thinks he is. Mary Bliss is the first on the list, and I am next."

"May 10th .- Mary is not successful-or at least she has given up the attempt. And now I am to try. What if in gaining his heart, I should lose my own!-Never fear!"

"12th. Yesterday was a beautiful day. Adele! If you will listen to me I will talk to you of yesterday. Early in the morning I sauntered out carelessly, book in hand, for a stroll in the public garden. It was a very sweet morning, and the birds sang merrily-and I was merry too, for I do not walk to the garden without a purpose. I was merry, and so I tripped carelessly along the gravelled walks, until I came to the bower where the spring is hidden among the shrubbery that surrounds it; and who should I meet but Harry! I uttered an came to lay a snare for him, felt very much like being snared myself. There is something in his dark, passionate eye that makes my hear throb faster than when I am alone in my chamber.

"He was reading 'St. Agnes' Eve,' he said-that exquisite poem of poor Keats; on the morrow, here, he would read it to me. And I have promised to meet him here to-morrow-do not fear for me, for 1 guess I don't love him yet, dear Adele--I "15th. Four days have passed away since I wrote you last. I told you that I had promised to meet Henry in the bower to hear him read "St. Agnes' Eve." I met him there before the dew was off the grass. The brooklet murmured sweetly, and the flowers smiled, and the little birds twittered and chirped away happily-and-I will confess it--I was happy.

"With his rich, metodious voice he read that delicious poem, and I found that I had never known the half of the beauties it contains. I wish you could hear him read it. Adele, for his voice brings to the surface every hidden beauty.

"When he had finished it, he timidly glanced at me-for you know such sweet things leave a something in the heart that makes one timorous-he timidly glanced at me, and closed. I essayed to praise the poem and his voice, but a stammering came upon my tongue, and I felt the blood rushing to my cheeks. And then-but I will not tell you how I contrived to fly away from my awkward situation. That night I was obliged to report to the band-I am afraid I deceived some of them."

"20th. Adele! shall I let you gaze at my heart? Can I help it? for I commenced telling you of my adventures of charming, when lo! I-but wait a moment and I will tell you all, my dear and long-tried friend. Yesterday, as I sat by Henry's side in the bower, he gave me a rose-bud! I knew its language, and the secret of my soul ran foolishly from my heart to my face. My deep blushes, he said, emboldened him, and he knelt before me and told me that he loved me, and asked me if I could love him. What could I do, Adela, frightened as I was, but murmur 'Yes,'-and lay my head ing of his noble heart—then, if never before, I knew that I loved him. You never did hear the birds sing as they did then! And the little brook frolicked ever so gleefully. I am happy! I need not tell you so, for you will know it without. This world is a bright one, for all that the misanthropes say I guess they never sing for them, for if they did, they couldn't call this earth a mournful

"To-night I have engaged to report to the band,' and what should I do! extracts from letters that she had received do not dream that the charmer is charmed! from an an intimate acquaintaince; saying I must deceive them for this once, and I will pretend to give up after now. Good night."

"21st. Adele-I am alone in my little room. The music of the little brook is sad to me now, The birds are all mocking my peor heart. Adele! oh, my Adele! mine eves wet this sheet, when I tell you that I am very sad. The sun is gone out to me, and it is so dark that I wish to lean upon vou-will von let me Adele?

"But a few hours ago, and I was happier than my canary bird.

"This morning Charlie brought me a little no'e from Heary. Here it is-

"Mary-Yesterday, a friend of mine told me to be careful how I gave my heart to your keeping; for you had been selected by a party of girls to win my heart in sport.

"I would not, could not believe himwhen he offered me a chance to hear from your own lips a confession of the fact. I did-no matter how-hear you say last night to a company of giddy girls, that you would humble me after a while.

"If you knew, Mary, the poignancy of my grief, you would never again trifle with so sacred a thing as a heart. "I leave this place before you will receive this, and you never can know whither I have HENRY." "Need I tell you, Adele, how like a stroke of lightning this came to my heart? I conless to you, with hot tears blinding my eyes, that I did wrong in telling the girls what I did, but I did it to conceal my love for Henry. I have been to the place where he first told me he loved me, and everything said to me-he is gone."

"Adele, may . lean upon you? I have lost a wealth of courage and strength within a few hours, and I wish something to lean upon---something,"

I laid down the note book, "Cousin Adele," said I, "have you heard nothing from

"Nothing."

"And Mary -- where is she?"

She gently took my hand in hers, and with the other pointed to the sky, and said, with a tear dropping from her eye---

"Do you understand me?" Av--- I understood her.

GIRLS BEWARE .-- A late writer has forcibly and truly said, in reference to the holy

I don't know why--but I blushed--I, who altar with one who loves to linger round the wine cup. He may pass unscathed through the fiery ordeal, and the bright hope of the bride may ripen into fruition But, fair reader, let not the splendor of wealth, nor the allurements of pleasure, nor the promis- to call and examine the stock and prices before ed triumphs of ambition, tempt you to a risk so fraught with danger to all you hold and he promised that if I would meet him dear. Honest industry, joined with temperance, mey carve a fortune, and all that ambition should covet; but wealth, talents, fame, can never gild the drunkard's home, nor soothe the sorrows of a drunkard's wife."

> FASTIDIOUS TASTE. - An amusing little incident occurred at a city hotel a few days ago. A verdant looking chap sat down to take "some filin," as the immortal Joe Lawson would say, and in due time a waster presented himself at the back of our hero's chair and inquired,

"Tea or coffee sir?"

" Tea." he answered. "What kind of tea, sir?"

Greeney looked up in the waiter's face, and with considerable emphasis, said:

"Why, store tea, of course; I don't want none of your blamed sassafrac stuff.

"Mother, send me for the doctor." "Why, my son?"

"'Case that man in the parlor is a going o die---he said he would, if sister Jane would not marry him, and Jane said she would'nt.
