

Court House and extending to Calhoun, Charleston, to be connected by a system of roads, not only with Cincinnati, but with Memphis and Cairo, two important points on the Mississippi river and at a distance from each other equal to the entire breadth of Tennessee, and nearly one third of Kentucky. All the immense trade which the Mississippi and its tributaries bring to this important point, together with that of the fertile regions through which these roads and their numerous feeders pass, must find its outlet through Charleston. At a single glance you must perceive the magnificent prospect it presents. It would be a suicidal policy in our State not to secure this gigantic commerce, now that it is within its reach. But to secure it, the Legislature must subscribe liberally. So great are the advantages it presents, so great the prosperity it will bring, the State could well afford alone to build this only link which is now wanting in this mighty chain. But there is no call for this.—Charleston, I am informed, will subscribe half a million, and even more, if necessary. Enough has already been subscribed in North Carolina to secure the Charter of that State, and Tennessee, by her general system of liberality to her roads, gives $8000 per mile. As deeply interested as all these States are in this grand scheme, none are as deeply so as South Carolina. I therefore recommend that you subscribe a million dollars to this road, or even more, if it be necessary to complete it. Even if the stock never paid a dollar of interest, it would be a judicious expenditure on the part of the Legislature.

But from the fact that it must inevitably be the great thoroughfare over which the commerce of five or six of the largest States of this Union will pass together with the immense amount of travel, which from its position it will command, there cannot be a doubt that the stock will pay a heavy interest and thus make the investment a profitable one for the State. And if we add to this consideration the fact that it will greatly increase the business, and consequently the profits of the roads already built, in which the State has a large amount of stock, you will see a further inducement for fostering the enterprise.

I trust no sectional feeling will be brought to bear on this question. It is a State matter. It is true that the interest of Charleston will be more promoted than any other section of our State, but the wealth which will be poured into her lap, will be radiated throughout its entire extent.

There is also, I believe, a project on foot to extend the Charlotte Road so as to command a portion of his trade. These two projects cannot interfere with each other, and they ought not to be considered antagonistic, but rather assisting each other in carrying out a grand plan of improvement. When application is made for assistance to extend this road, the same liberality ought to be extended to it. The State cannot expend too much money in the construction of Railroads, providing they are judiciously located, and economically built; for every dollar will be returned four-fold to its citizens by the advantages they afford. Nor will it be necessary to tax the people for this purpose. Borrow the money and the roads themselves will soon pay the interest, and gradually liquidate the debt. By a joint resolution of the last General Assembly, a Commission was appointed to inquire into the feasibility of deepening, shortening, or in any other manner improving, the Channel of the Bar and other approaches of the Charleston Harbor.

When the Commission held its first meeting, we found that the Chamber of Commerce already had the matter under consideration. I feel it due to that enlightened and public spirited association, publicly to acknowledge the kindness and courtesy extended to the Commission, in placing at our disposal the information which it had already collected.

The Chamber of Commerce had memorialized the Congress of the United States, calling its attention to this work as one of national utility and importance, and asking an appropriation for the purpose of carrying it out. The Congress of the United States appropriated $50,000. The Commission took no part in this memorial, but employed a portion of the fund allowed by the State to defray the expense of a preliminary survey. The result of this survey has afforded the most gratifying assurance of the practicability of opening the Bar. I must also acknowledge the courtesy and kindness of the officers of the coast survey, who placed at our disposal the maps of the harbor, and cooperated with the Commission in carrying on the Survey. The vast importance of the work to the future prosperity of Charleston, renders it an object of peculiar interest to the State. It is scarcely possible to estimate the amount of expenditure its vast importance would justify. There is, however, no need at present for this purpose, as the Federal Government has taken it in hand. It will perhaps, however, be well to continue the present Commission until the work is actually commenced by the Government of the United States.

The report of Prof. Baché, the report of the Commission, together with an account of the expenditure of a portion of the fund appropriated by the Legislature is herewith transmitted.

In pursuance of an act of the last Legislature, the State Convention met at the appointed time. The proceedings of that body, together with the expenses incurred, are herewith transmitted to you in accordance with its request. Perhaps there never was a body assembled under circumstances of so much embarrassment, and which called for an exercise of such prudence, sagacity, and devoted patriotism on the part of its members.

The same causes of complaint against the Federal Government which called it into life, still existed in full force. No evidence had been given that its onward progress towards a consolidated despotism was stayed, or that any barrier had been erected against that tide of fanaticism, which, with fearful rapidity was rolling on, threatening the overthrow of the institutions of the South. No security was afforded us that we should not forever remain in a state of vassalage to the Federal Government, paying far beyond our just proportion of its expenses, and receiving far less than our share of its expenditure. Nor do I believe that any change had taken place in the feelings and opinions of the people of our State.

An almost universal feeling of indignation at our wrongs and a burning desire to redress them prevailed. But discord and party strife, which have blasted the success of many a glorious cause, had raised its head among us and paralyzed our strength. One party believed that the time had come when every consideration of policy and duty required that the State should act, even though it should stand alone. Another party believed that the separate action of the State would be ruinous, and that the co-operation of the other Southern States whose interests and destiny were the same as ours, could and would be obtained. No doubt that both parties were honest in their convictions, that the policy recommended by each would redound to the welfare of our State. The discussion of these conflicting opinions produced the bitterest party feelings.

Amid the convulsive throes of this fierce strife, the question of our wrongs was almost forgotten. Thus did our State present the mournful spectacle of a people whose common wrongs and common dangers should have united in the closest bonds, completely prostrated and paralyzed, not by the force and power of the enemy, but by their own internal strifes. It was too plainly seen that any action under existing circumstances, could end in nothing but self destruction.

Many a bold and gallant heart that had never quailed before the power of the Federal Government, grew faint at the prospect, and slunk from the thought of civil strife.

The people had, by a large majority, passed their verdict against separate secession, in the election which had been recently held for members to a Southern Congress. Under these circumstances the Convention met. The only course which wisdom and patriotism could suggest, was pursued, namely, to heal the wounds which had lately been inflicted, and reunite the State. I can but congratulate you on the happy result. The members of that Convention, actuated by a spirit worthy of the palmy days of our Commonwealth, determined to bury all bitter feelings that had been generated by the contest, and act with an eye single to the good of the State, under the circumstances which then existed. Nor do I think, in effecting this great object, that any sacrifice of principle was involved. The principles which have ever been held dear amongst us, were not only re-affirmed, but set forth in the solemn form of an Ordinance.

But sincerely as I feel the gratification of announcing to you that the State has been united, I must call upon you to remember that our safety has not yet been secured. The storm which, one day or other is destined to burst upon us is still brewing. The great features of the compromise, which induced our sister Southern States to accept it, has been openly violated. In one of the Northern States the Fugitive Slave Law has been nullified, and in all the others it is but a dead letter. A brutal murder of a slaveholder has been the result of an attempt to reclaim a slave under this vantage law. The spirit of mischief is working with fearful energy. Agitation still goes on with ceaseless activity. Every element which can be made to operate on public opinion, is put in action against our institutions. Even that powerful weapon, the literature of the country, is employed to direct its polished but poisoned shafts against them. It is true that nothing has been done by Congress, since your last session, against which we can complain. Judging however, from the elements which are at work, and from the history of the past, we cannot hope that this cessation from hostilities acts against our institutions will be of long duration. Amid all our prosperity, and the still greater prosperity which we would enjoy if left alone, the heart sickens at the contemplation of that fierce fanaticism which is at work, and which hangs like a pall upon our future. However strong may be my convictions as to the propriety of an attempt to stay the coming storm by the separate action of the State, and however deeply I may deplore the decision to which our people have come upon this subject, God forbid that I should fan into a flame those expiring embers, by now recommending it to you. Our destiny, for weal or woe, is connected with the whole South. Further aggressions (which will surely come) will convince our Southern States that the institution upon which not only the prosperity of the South, but Republicanism itself depends, is no longer safe in the Union. Then we may hope that they will rise in the majesty of their strength and spirit, and in conjunction with us, either force our rights to be respected in the Union, or take our place as a Southern Confederacy amongst the nations of the earth.

In the meantime, let us unite, heart and hand, in carrying out those great schemes of internal improvement, by which the wealth and resources of our State will be developed, and thus give it all the power and strength of which it is capable.
