Browns Attend Celebration

Dr. and Mrs. Marshall Brown visited Lebanon, Tennessee last week to attend celebrations honoring Dr. L. L. Rice on his 100th birthday. Dr. Rice was head of Castle Heights Military Academy when Dr. Brown graduated there in 1918 and was later president of Cumberland University at Lebanon.

When Dr. Rice spoke at a convocation on October 14th it was the first time in the history of American higher education when a former college president returned to the campus he served and eloquently addressed the student body on his 100th birthday.

Dr. Rice is a member of a distinguished literary family and he himself has published ten books and still writes occasionally for magazines. Following the morning address of Dr. Rice, there was a testimonial banquet where Dr. Brown was one of the speakers paying tribute to this scholar and man of letters.

After the Lebanon visit, Dr. Brown flew to New York for a conference of U. S. Office of Education officials and State Directors of Federal grant programs for college construction and equipment. The conference was held in the large, new Federal Building in New York, where a bomb threat has caused strict security measures. Dr. Brown said that police even opened the little case which contained a few toilet articles and his shaving kit. No explosives were found and Dr. Brown reported an uneventful return by plane to Nashville and by auto from there to Clinton.
