Regulations Given By Rationing Board

The local war price and rationing board issued the following statement yesterday:

"It is very important that ration books held by persons inducted into the armed forces be returned to the ration board. If any member of your family has been inducted and you still hold a sugar and coffee ration book in his name, turn it in at once.

"If the inductee had a car and basic 'A' gas ration book and some member of the family still uses the car, the gas ration book may be retained. However, any supplemental 'B' or 'C' ration he held must be turned in.

"The same rules apply to any deceased person. The board will appreciate very much your cooperation in turning in these ration books immediately.

For Institutional Users, Boarding Houses, Cafes, Etc.

"A consumer who arranges to eat 14 or more meals per week in the same establishment must surrender his war ration book to that establishment at or before the time he eats the first of such meals. It is also the responsibility of the owner or manager of the establishment to secure the surrender of the book.

"The owner or manager of the establishment is not to use these stamps to purchase sugar or coffee since he is given sufficient allotment by the ration board."
