Navy Tries First Amphibious Glider

A closeup view of the U. S. navy's amphibious glider (first of its kind in the world) during tryout at the Philadelphia navy yard. The glider is loaded to capacity with 12 fully equipped men. It was towed aloft by a Catalina seaplane and landed on the Delaware river. Gliders like this could be used for making fast landings of beachhead parties.

Farm Machinery To Do Big Job In War Food Effort

Last week H. J. and D. T. Pitts, local farm machinery dealers, held a meeting for many of their farmer customers and discussed ways and means of making their present machinery do more and better work needed to aid the war food effort.

A novel and valuable method was used by Messrs. Pitts, who, assisted by men from B. F. Avery & Sons company, had Dr. H. L. Todd, a local owner of Avery equipment, bring his tractor, plow and cultivator in especially for the school.

The local dealers and their assistants then took the machines down and re-assembled them, assisted by the farmers present. As each machine was re-assembled each step was thoroughly discussed and the best way to attain best performance was determined.

Farmers who attended state that they learned many ways to get better performance from their machinery.

These farmers further state that before attending the meeting they were of the opinion that they were able to make all needed adjustments on their machines to obtain best performance. But, due to the extreme care with which the meeting was prepared, many new ideas were learned and that in the future they expect to do far better work than ever before.

Messrs. Pitts say that this meeting was so successful they expect to have other such meetings and invite other farmers who may be interested in ways of improving their farm implement performance. Many farmers will be visited on their farms, both to present this new program and check on those already familiar with it for possible further assistance.
