THIS IS HER DAY

This is her day, though every day is hers,
Brimmed as they are with urgent tasks and deeds;
The glad young mother who must daily meet
Small children's constant needs.

This is her day: the mother who has seen
Her children grow like young corn in the sun;
Tall, straight and clean, who takes a keen delight
And pride in every one.

This is her day—the mother now grown old,
Who folds her hands, and slowly rocks her chair,
Who nods and smiles across the gathering dusk
At a child who is not there.

—Grace Noll Crowell.
