NATIONWIDE PLAN ON STABILIZATION OF LABOR DROPPED

Regional Orders To Cover Any Job-Shifting That Would Be Required.

Washington, May 3. — Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt said today that plans for a nationwide employment stabilization order have been dropped. Twelve regional agreements are to take its place.

Most of the regional management-labor pacts, of which nine have been completed, will require essential workers to get a "certificate of availability" before transferring to a new job, regardless of whether it calls for more, less or the same wages.

The wage-job freeze of April 17 covered only transfers at higher pay but in other respects the regional agreements are more liberal.

They permit workers to change jobs for more money if laid off or discharged, if they are working only part time or if they would make a greater contribution to the war effort by taking the new position.

McNutt said the regional agreements also would permit transfers in "hardship cases," or in situations where the shift was necessitated by the Laurens hospital where she underwent an operation Monday.

Delmar Fern Hardman is improving after being ill.

Mrs. Ethel Nelson is ill at her home on Beauregard street.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Mack Taylor have chicken pox.

Mrs. Nellie Price is improving after a recent illness.

Mrs. Leathers continues ill at her home on Davis street.

compelling personal circumstances.

The regional control agreements are temporary, to be replaced as rapidly as possible, McNutt said, by permanent ones.

McNutt told his press conference that he is not considering ordering a 48-hour week in the coal mining industry because "jurisdiction over coal apparently has been placed elsewhere." He has, however, asked the WMC labor-management committee to make a general study to determine which industries should be placed on the 48-hour-week nationally.

The manpower chief said the regional agreements would make it unnecessary to establish the nationwide employment stabilization agreement under consideration following complaints from labor groups that the freeze order of April 17 was too harsh, in that it prevented any transfers to higher paid jobs.

The county-wide plan was abandoned last week, McNutt said, when his regional directors disclosed they had made rapid progress in working out temporary agreements.

The regions with headquarters in Chicago, Kansas City and Denver still lack agreements, but their directors have promised they will be ready in a few days.
