DRAFT PROGRAM NOT HURT MANY, HERSHEY HOLDS

Does Not Expect Large Proportion of Fathers To Pass Exams.

San Francisco, August 7.—Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, said today "selective service, in the procurement of men for the armed forces, is on the plateau and the job ahead of us is nasty but not big."

The national director of selective service, at a press conference, was referring to the drafting of pre-war fathers, now authorized for October 1 whenever essential to meet quotas.

He said, however, that of the 7,000,000 such men in this country "we would be lucky if 2,000,000 of them could pass the physical examination (their average age is 31 compared to the Army's average of 24), and I don't believe we will have to take all of them anyway within the next 12 months."

The other reservists he cited as (1) the current 3,000,000 4Fs, some of whom might be reclassified; (2) the 100,000 available youths becoming of age (18) each month, of which more than half probably would meet requirements; (3) those who might be spared from vital industry.

The general said a liberal policy would be followed in deferring workers in aircraft and shipbuilding, and particularly farmers, because "we don't want to interfere with the production of essentials."

but he added that "I am certain the aircraft and shipbuilding industry after the war doesn't want to be remembered as a haven of draft dodgers."

General Hershey praised highly the work of local draft boards, urged a program of physical training after the war to "prevent a repetition of the present large number of rejections, and said that by terming selective service on the plateau he did "not want to leave the impression I think the war is over by any means."

SAY, "I SAW IT IN THE CHRONICLE." THANK YOU.
