THE NATIONAL SCENE

As Washington Sees It

Special to The Chronicle.

Washington, Oct. 5.—The appointment of Edward R. Stettinius, former chairman of the board of U. S. Steel, to the position of undersecretary of state, and the appointment of Leo Crowley, former chairman of the board of Standard Gas and Electric company, to the position of head of the office of foreign economic administration, indicates a major change in the attitude of President Roosevelt toward leadership by experienced business men.

In the past, appointments of this scope were usually given to experienced New Deal diplomats, to men of political importance or to professors. These recent appointments show the importance which the President now attaches to economic experience in solving the complicated problems of international relations which we are now facing and which will become increasingly important as the war nears its end.

These appointments have been lauded by Republicans and Democrats alike, for it is realized by all that neither of these men have political ambitions and are serving their country with no selfish motive. Mr. Stettinius was one of the highest paid business men in the nation before he gave up his job to become lend-lease administrator. And Mr. Crowley quit a $50,000-a-year position to head the office of economic warfare without pay. In his new post he receives a salary of $10,000 a year—the first pay he has accepted from the government.

As head of the lend-lease program, Mr. Stettinius has become more popular than most of our government leaders in Russia and it is expected that he will play an important role in the complicated meetings of the Allied nations which are now being planned to reach agreements on peace terms and on the treatment to be accorded to conquered countries.

It is recognized by diplomats here that any disagreement on peace terms between Russia and the democracies would be a real diplomatic victory for Germany and it is believed that, if anyone can prevent a split-up of the aims of the Allied nations, Mr. Stettinius can. For there is little doubt that an agreement must be arrived at on a business basis whereby each nation will be assured of a favorable trade position in the future.

Most of the nations allied with the United States, remembering our attitude following the last war, fear that we will again revert to a more or less isolationist policy. But there is growing evidence that this will not happen again. It is obvious that both the President and Secretary of State Hull favor strong international relationships, and even the house of representatives has indicated that it recognizes the importance of working closely with other nations. The house indicated this by passing a resolution reading:

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), that the congress hereby expresses itself as favoring the creation of appropriate international machinery with power adequate to establish and to maintain a just and lasting peace among the nations of the world, and as favoring participation by the United States therein, through its constitutional processes."

It is now expected that two meetings will be held with Russia before the end of the year. One will be a meeting of foreign ministers, which will probably be attended by both Mr. Hull and Mr. Stettinius. The other will be the long anticipated meeting between President Roosevelt, Winston Churchill and Josef Stalin. A lasting peace following this war may well depend on the agreements reached at these meetings.

State Fair To Exhibit South Carolina Hogs

Florence, Oct. 4.—A. L. DuRant, livestock specialist of the Clemson extension service, calls the attention of farmers and 4-H club members to the fact that the swine department of the state fair this year offers three chances to exhibit their hogs in competition for prizes—the general swine section, the fat barrow show, and the 4-H pig club show.

The swine department is open only to South Carolina farmers. There will be no outside competition, so state farmers and 4-H club members will have a chance to compete for these prizes.

The fat barrow show is also for South Carolina farmers and 4-H club members. Farmers or club members having fat barrows in the listed weights will have a chance to exhibit these hogs, and arrangements will be made to sell them if desired.

The 4-H pig club show is for registered pigs owned by 4-H club members. These pigs do not have to pay a fee and can also be shown in the farmers' classes.

South Carolina Eyes Are Focused Here Every Day

Each new day finds South Carolinians eagerly turning to their NEWS AND COURIER for the news of the day—and here, as regularly as the coming of day itself, they find ALL the news, ALL the facts, ALL the details about events that are reshaping the world—and the wartime regulations and instructions they must have to guide them in their homefront tasks.

This custom of relying on THE NEWS AND COURIER for all the news while it is news is a habit of long standing because for 140 years South Carolinians in all walks of life have instinctively bought and read this newspaper. And equally important is the fact that more people write letters to it to express their own views and opinions on subjects of current interest than to any other newspaper in South Carolina.
