SATURDAY, AUGUST 19, 1922.

A campaign is on in this county to get the cotton growers to join the cooperative marketing association. We understand that not as many are uniting with the organization as should do so. It is perhaps the best move yet made towards fair prices and sensible marketing. We cannot see how any grower can afford to stay out of the movement. It cannot hurt you; it may do you great good. Indeed, since practically all other producers are united in such an organization, it is greatly to the disadvantage of the cotton grower to stay out of such an organization.

Governor Harvey, in a speech before the regular meeting of the Darlington Kiwanis Club Thursday, appealed to the law-abiding citizens of the state to do their utmost to aid officers in their fight against the crime wave. We believe he is correct in saying that a good proportion of the responsibility for the prevalence of crime in the state rests at the door of the "so-called law-abiding citizens." He said: "The people expect the chief executive to be firm, but forget to be firm themselves." He is correct also, when he says: "Many good citizens sign petitions to have criminals pardoned and so 'pass the buck' to the governor." It is a notorious fact that men, otherwise thoughtful and conscientious, will sign almost anything, in the form of a petition, that is stuck under their noses. Let a man be convicted in this state, and so soon as sentence is passed, a petition is going the rounds to have him pardoned or paroled. As soon as the law has functioned, a determined effort is made to undo its work. Men who know next to nothing about the merits of the case, acting upon impulse born of sympathy, go about to kill the effect of the law. The fact that little or no knowledge of the case is possessed by the signer deters him not one little bit. It is so easy to get rid of the matter; just sign your name; it will not do any harm, any way, it is "up to the governor." That is the way they often reason. Others shrink from signing through fear of bringing upon themselves the ill will of friends of the convicted man, or through cowardly fear that to refuse to sign may injure their business. Most of us are in some degree moral cowards. We like the chestnuts but prefer to have a catspaw to obtain them. We demand that the law be enforced, yet go about breaking down the law's enforcement by signing a petition to have its teeth extracted. We are all too careless in the matter of signing any and every petition stuck under our noses. Often a man will give a recommendation in writing that he knows is a betrayal of truth. It is so easy to "pass the buck." But that does not make it right, not by a long sight.

The people of the state should give hearty approval of Governor Harvey's stand upon the question of law enforcement. If the governor of the state is not sustained by the law-abiding citizens, how can it be hoped that conditions will change? It is true, as Governor Harvey says, the wave of crime in this state is alarming. We are reaping the result of too liberal pardoning on the part of former governors, and of the great back wash from the war. It is also true that the operation of the bootleg under prohibition is contributing its part. This is not to the discredit of prohibition. It is but natural that with the coming of a great, a radical change of the laws in relation to the liquor traffic should bring about additional outbreaks of crime. Here again it is the moral cowards, the men who are not willing to stand up for the law, who are largely to blame. So long as the "influential" man orders his booze, drinks it, patronizes the bootleg, winks at his activities and thus lines up with him, it will be difficult to convict the criminal who peddles booze in violation of law and the illicit dis-killer who makes the "moonshine." An "influential" citizen who is a patron of the bootleg is not likely to be speaking words of commendation to the officers of the law. His acts are such that his words are of necessity full of influence for the violation of the law. When the influential citizen becomes willing to deny himself the pleasure of his "toddy," when he ceases to speak disparagingly of prohibition, when he realizes that he owes a duty to his state to stand for law, then will much of the "crime wave" be a thing of the past.

There is a disposition on the part of many people to speak disparagingly of officers and of the courts, juries and the machinery of law. There is the shyster lawyer who stoops to any degradation to free his client. There are emotional preachers and chicken hearted teachers—too many of them entirely, for the good of society and for the maintenance of the law in the land. When the people generally awake to these facts we will have better law enforcement and less crime. When there are less delays, less cheating of justice, less misguided sympathy for the criminal, a better day will have arrived.

The people of the state should not only endorse Governor Harvey's stand for the enforcement of law, but they should cooperate to the fullest extent possible. It is rendering a distinct service to this state. He is making a very good governor indeed.

Our cat says we oppose high taxes yet repudiate what low taxes will buy.

Our cat says even experience fails to teach a bootleg.

Our cat says he reads in the papers that the coal profiteers are to be dealt with.

Our cat says sewerpipe news is not fit to print.

Our cat says most of the funny papers are not even funny.

Our cat says take a share of stock in the cannery.

Our cat says do a kind deed today in behalf of a less fortunate brother.

To Talk of Raising

Cotton in Brazil

Washington, Aug. 16.—(By The Associated Press).—Conferences for the discussion of scientific and industrial progress and development, to which representatives from all nations have been invited, will be held during September and October at Rio de Janeiro in conjunction with the Brazilian centennial exposition, according to announcement today by the American commission to the exposition.

Subject discussed at one of the conferences will be the development of cotton production in Brazil and foreign countries, the sessions being held under the auspices of the National Agricultural Society. A National Chemical congress, admitting foreign participation also will be held at which there will be a general discussion of questions of chemistry and their application to the needs of the industrial progress of Brazil. A national fuel congress, to be divided into three sections, dealing with scientific, technical, industrial and economic aspects, will be confined, it was said, to problems which confront Brazil. Other congresses will deal with agriculture and stock raising, engineering and railroad construction, hydroelectricity, anthropology and archaeology, medicine and surgery.

Dates for the holding of the various national and scientific congresses, as communicated to the headquarters of the American commission here by Director General Collier, who is now in Brazil, were announced today as follows:

International congress of Pan-Americans, Aug. 20-30. Brazilian congress for protection of children and Third South American congress of the child, August 27-September 5. International congress higher learning, September 10-25. South American railway congress and Congress of Engineers, September 15-30. The International Congress of American History will convene on the opening day of the exposition, September 7.

My mind goes back today to the time I was a little school boy. The school house was located near a big cut in the public road so as to keep the child's attention from being drawn in that direction by people passing. The walls of the house were built of mud and the cracks started with the roughest kind of mud. The gables were also constructed of gals with ridge poles extending lengthwise to support the roof. The roof was made of bards, some three feet long, split from oak trees and weighed down by dunks and poles to keep them in place, or in other words, to take the place of nails. This covering above afforded a good chance to study astronomy and a good opportunity for one to know when it was raining without further investigation. There was only one door, which was discarded in the summer and swung again on its wooden hinges during the winter. When it was opened or shut it made a noise somewhat like an auto horn does now, only more harsh. One log was cut out of the back end of the house to admit light to those who were learning to write and the space covered by a board hung by hinges made by an old bootleg or to have it up-to-date a piece of old belt. The amount of light admitted by said window was nicely regulated by sticks cut of different lengths to suit the occasion.

The writing desk was some plank (as then called) so arranged to form sort of an incline plane suitable for writing. The floor was put down close enough to permit children walking over it in safety. Their feet were well developed but not close enough to prevent books or pencils from falling through. The chimney was constructed of mud and sticks, so arranged that the smoke had plenty of room in its ascent. The fireplace was some six or eight feet wide and was made of poles or logs connected with the house and reinforced on the inside with mud and rocks, the harsh of the same material. The school fires were kept burning by the "big boys" gleaming the woods for logs, stumps or whatever they could find that was any way combustible, a supply being kept inside for a rainy day. The seats were made from slabs supported by wooden pins or blocks or any old thing that happened to be handy. They had no support on the back whatever without they happened to be near the wall. Now, gentle reader, before we commence teaching we must employ a teacher, etc. Homo.

In all Great Britain during 1921 the right of naturalization was extended to only 1,053 persons. The right was revoked in the cases of 16 persons, one of whom was the former knight, Edgar Speyer, now of New York.

Coal Available for Utilities

Priority orders for 10,000 tons of coal can be obtained for South Carolina utilities in the priority class, Chairman Shealy of the railroad commission wired yesterday from Washington, this being contingent upon guarantees of the banks to make payment. This message affects electric light, gas, ice and other such plants the commission explained.

Following the receipt of the telegram the commission notified all such plants and asked them to advise the commission of their supply on hand together with their future demand. "Your attention is called particularly to the requirement of the bank guarantee," the commission advised the utilities.

Mr. Shealy's telegram was as follows:

"We can get priority orders 10,000 tons coal for public utilities if guarantee is given by banks for payment. Ice, gas and such utilities should arrange with bank for letter of credit in duplicate. Such coal will have to be shipped to me as coal distributor, Spartanburg, for distribution where needed. You may notify interested parties."

All day yesterday the commission was again flooded with orders for coal. Very little fuel is on hand and consequently the commission is unable to supply the demand. The cotton mills of the state are facing a shut down unless relief is afforded them. But so far arrangements have not been completed. Chairman Shealy is still in Washington working on the case and hopes to be able to procure fuel for the mills.—The State.
