THE SPY.
The guard said "Sunrise." That's not long to wait!
I heard a clock chime three a while ago,
And four I'll hear, but five will be too late.
A new day then, a day I shall not know!
'Tis strange, with such a little time to spare,
To sit alone and idle in the dark,
To listen for their feet upon the stair—
Those German hunters coming for their mark!

So near our lines—to miss it by a hair!
I staked one life against a German corps.
Had I won through, then we'd have caught them there
And added twenty thousand to our score.

'Twas sporting odds, I'd take them any time,
And yet I never thought that I would die
For something half a virtue, half a crime—
Would face a firing squad and fall a spy!
What matters it? The service—that is all!
Not always in the fight are vict'ries won,
So, steady as a soldier to you wall,
I hear their tramping feet and there's the Sun!
