VAST ARMY WOMEN WORKERS IN BERLIN

(By Associated Press.)
Berlin, April 5.—Nearly 900,000 women are now at one kind of work or another in Berlin. They have swarmed into almost every field of activity, no matter how difficult; they are earning more money than they ever had before; many have lost their own bread winners and are for all time dependent upon their own efforts. The probable unwillingness of the women to go back to their homes after the war is being more and more anticipated by the labor leaders who say the women must go in favor of the men when the time comes.

By far the largest proportion of the women now employed in Berlin are unskilled workers, only a small part are customarily so employed. They have done wonderfully well, even in such difficult and strenuous occupations as metal workers, but they are not, because of physical handicaps, the equal of their male predecessors.

Just how large will be the number of widows, or of women left with crippled husbands, after the war, the labor leaders do not attempt as yet to intimate. These, on the one hand, constitute, however, but part of the problems. Fully as puzzling is the question of what to do with those women who, though they later will have other means of support, are expected deliberately to balk at retiring to a non-productive life again.

The employer who is able to hire women more cheaply than men, will be loath to change to the old method, and for a time is not going to be able to afford it. A not inconsiderable degree of diplomacy combined with a judicious use of compulsion is going to be necessary, labor leaders feel, before the problem can be adjusted.

There is hardly an occupation into which women have not crowded during the past year. The employment of women as street car conductors is already an old and familiar condition, and women "motormen" have become more or less familiar sights even in the busy downtown streets of Berlin.

The first woman taxicab chauffeur was noted early last summer, and she has multiplied somewhat since then. The construction company building sections of the city has for months employed feminine "huskies," young and old, for shovelling out the sandy underpinning of the street. Two years ago the streets of the capital were cleaned by men of military age. Their places were taken by boys, and now women are being introduced as fast as the youths grow up to military age and enter the army. It is a common sight on any street to see coal being carted into residences from beams by women instead of men.

The underground railway companies of Berlin months ago installed women as ticket choppers, and then introduced them as guards. When it was found that their dresses frequently got caught in doors, the companies did not go back to male help but ordered the women to don bloomers, and today there are more of them to be seen than men.

Even Germans, accustomed to seeing women performing heavy duties,
