

GALLEY ONE. A FINAL DUSTING MAY FURTHER PROTECT BOLLS.

Clemson College, Aug. 21.—Wherever natural shedding is heavy and the weevil is very active, and there is little or no fruiting, no further profit may be expected from dusting; but wherever normal weather conditions exist and not more than normal shedding occurs and cotton is still fruiting, another dusting is advisable in order to give every possible protection to the bolls, said Prof. A. F. Conradi, entomologist, this morning after the weekly conference in Director Long's office on the boll weevil situation. Other facts and suggestions developed at the conference are given below.

The weather conditions are variable throughout the state, ranging from extreme wet weather in some localities to extreme drought in others. In many fields throughout the central and southern parts of the state there is little fruiting at this time, because of excessive natural shedding combined with weevil punctures. In dry areas in the Piedmont section natural shedding is very heavy although weevil infestation is comparatively light. But the falling off of fruit is generally attributed by farmers to the boll weevil.

The general weather conditions at this time resemble those of last year, although the same extremes do not exist in the same localities in every case. The weather damage at this time should not be overlooked by farmers, and every effort should be made to get most careful and impartial estimates of the percentage of their crop loss due to weevil and the percentage due to natural shedding. It must be remembered that, owing to heavy continuous rainfall in certain sections of the state, there would likely have been a crop failure regardless of the boll weevil. This is important for people to consider so that they may not get the idea that cotton can no longer be grown successfully. There were cotton crop failures on account of weather long before the boll weevil came.

COWS ENABLE GROWER TO HOLD FOR BETTER PRICES.

Beginning with 1918, each year has been a long step ahead for H. B. Goodson, of Florence, S. C., a locality where the cattle tick has been eradicated. Here are the steps, year by year:

1918—Raising cotton and tobacco and enough corn to feed the mules. In the fall he had a 20-acre patch of fine rye for a cover crop, but it looked too good to be left uneaten. So he borrowed money at the bank and bought a few cows with the idea of fattening them and putting them on the market in December or January. But, unexpectedly, three of the cows dropped calves. They proved to be fairly good milkers and he started selling the milk to a distributing plant in a town nearby. In the spring he bought 4 more grades, bringing the total up to 7.

1919—Continued milking the 7 cows. In the fall 7 more grades were added at prices ranging from $35 to $65 a head.

1920—Some of the neighbors had bought Guernseys which were much superior to the cows of the locality. In February, Mr. Goodson bought 3 purebred cows, and at a sale in March he bought 2 more.

1921—This year the manure showed its value in building up the soil. On a field that had been treated with 5 loads to the acre, with 50 pounds of nitrate of soda at the last plowing, corn produced 55 bushels to the acre. Previously 35 bushels had been a good yield on this land.

1922—This year the fields that have been receiving manure will make 3 to 1 over fields that have not been manured.

But the whole story is not that of increase of soil fertility brought about by keeping cows. Mr. Goodson now has a herd of 12 purebred Guernseys, 10 cows and 2 bulls. Last December he sold a bull calf to a bull association in the State for $250. He is keeping another bull calf for which he was offered $750.

"Besides producing direct returns," says Mr. Goodson, "my cows by supplying me with a regular income, enabled me to hold my cotton crop until the price went up. I have raised most of my own feed, and as a result keeping cows has meant little outlay in money except for the animals themselves. In the fall of 1919, I sold my farm and have been renting since that time. I am now buying another farm and expect to build a silo soon."

"In the spring of 1919, I was getting 11 cents a point for each percent of butterfat per gallon of milk—about 5 cents a gallon—and for 125 days 7 cows brought me $12 a day. Prices for milk and butterfat are lower now, but they are high enough to make dairying profitable."

Since the modern bath tub was installed, it is pretty hard to tell when Saturday night rolls around.

An optimist is a fellow who loans a guy $10 when said guy already owes him $20.

The fellow who watches the clock can hardly expect to be anything but one of the hands.

Indigestion

Many persons, otherwise vigorous and healthy, are bothered occasionally with indigestion. The effects of a disordered stomach on the system are dangerous, and prompt treatment of indigestion is important. "The only medicine I have needed has been something to aid digestion and clean the liver," writes Mr. Fred Ashby, a McKinney, Texas, farmer. "My medicine is for indigestion and stomach trouble of any kind. I have never found anything that touches the spot, like Black-Draught. I take it in broken doses after meals. For a long time I tried pills, which gripped and didn't give the good results. Black-Draught liver medicine is easy to take, easy to keep, inexpensive."
