THE MOTHER'S DUTY.

BY ALICE M. WALKER. To keep one's mind on the weary round of household tasks all day long is rainous to the temper, and more wearing to the health than any amount of bodily labor. The Chantaqua course of reading comes to your very door to tread, bringing a boundless store of information and leading you to look into the depths of the sea and out into mentioned Peasants have a yoke over God's world about you. When once one becomes interested in this or any which baskets or packages are hung. similar course of reading, the question,

"Is life worth living?" answers itself. To those who object that all this takes time I would reply, so does everything that is worth doing at all. Yet when we really desire to accomplish anything, can we not always make or take the time to do it? A miles an hour. There are three classes do all her own work, be dressmaker and seamstress, and send the boys to school, and sew on the father's buttons, and yet not suffer her mind to divided into compartments running rust; can keep up her music, attend across the car and each hold six perand feel herself up with the times and as useful as anybody; maybe she can even join a grange and be a valuable in prices.
