Student Body Meets In University Chapel

Crowd Is Tricked
Realize That Promised Action Means Of Providing Audience To Hear Pool Pleas

Realizing that reports that attacks would be made on The Gamecock and the Garnet and Black were merely means of enticing them into a mass meeting, University students good-naturedly laughed at themselves and enthusiastically pledged their support to the swimming pool drive when they gathered in the chapel last night.

It was the first time this year that Carolina students have met in general session for the purpose of airing their opinions on controversial issues.

As time for the meeting approached, students gathered in apprehensive groups, spouting varying views on the question seemingly so paramount at the time.

They filed in and occupied their seats, as President Tom Mauldin rapped the gavel. Campus orators cleared their throats, ran hastily through their vocabulary, and sat primed for the great battle.

Easing the tension somewhat, Ed Salinger and Jack Killea made a couple preliminary motions, both of which were filed for discussion at a student body meeting next Wednesday night.

John Mozingo offered a resolution that a few issues of The Gamecock be dispensed with and that the money thus derived, along with what could be secured from dissolution of the annual, be turned over to the swimming pool fund.

Hardly waiting for Mozingo's argument in support of his resolution, someone moved that it be tabled.

Cries of "stand up" and "sit down" were directed at the voters. Intense excitement flowed over the crowd. The count was taken, showing that the motion to table was downed by a 72 to 48 margin. After expecting fierce debate, the students were determined not to end it all by killing the contended resolution.

There followed bitter arguments. Accusations were hurled from one to another—some of them fake, some seriously by those who weren't in on the farce.

Stepping onto the stage, Mozingo explained that the report that an attempt to appropriate funds of the University publications for pool construction was merely to get a good crowd out, because, he said, "I knew that unless we promised action of some kind, there wouldn't be a half-dozen out—and we have just got to raise the pool money somehow."

"Of the $500 collected so far, only $60 have come from the students," he pointed out.

Lawyers Give First Dance Plans Being Completed

Only Members Of Law School, Local Bar Association, And Outstanding Students Admitted

The law federation will give its first dance of the year in the University gymnasium on Friday night, November 22. Plans for the affair are now being completed by a committee chosen by the president of the federation. According to rumor about the law school the occasion promises to be one of the best of the year.

The dance will be open to only members of the law school, the local bar association and a few outstanding academic students on the campus including members of honorary and leadership groups and outstanding officers. Admission will be by non-transferable card only.

A mailing list is now being prepared and bids will be issued in the next day or so. Buster Spann and his Gamecocks will furnish music for the festivity.

Members of the committee in charge of this dance are: C. Bruce Littlejohn, T. T. Moore, Gedney Howe, Manigault Capers, and William Strange.

Stray Pup Pays Visit To Library Explores The Alcoves

Mongrel Dog Strays Through Halls Of Learning, Gives Students Welcome Diversion

The silence of concentration (or boredom) pervaded the entire library. Mid-semester quizzes were no doubt responsible for the large attendance, considering the early hour of the evening. At the various tables students were avidly poring over musty volumes that should have elicited at least a little of their attention some two months before. The thirst for knowledge was great. The time was short.

The quietness was becoming a little oppressive and several students showed definite signs of restlessness. Sleep would no doubt have followed if a diversion had not been provided from an unexpected source.

The door opened and several students entered. Trotting calmly at their heels, a forlorn-looking little dog followed them toward the desk. Undoubtedly a mongrel, the dog's running gear showed evidence of having taken a mud puddle in high.

Evidently sensing the fact that the region around the desk might prove unfriendly, he turned quickly and started in the opposite direction. For a while he rambled around quite docilely, poking an inquisitive damp nose in various corners and crevices.

Tiring of this, no doubt, and probably desiring more attention, he approached one of the alcoves where two girls were assiduously extracting knowledge from "quaint and curious volumes of forgotten lore."

In answer to their frantic gestures (which interpreted meant, "Depart in haste," "Go hence," or just plain "Scram") he assumed a belligerent attitude and emitted a series of mournful whines.

This process was repeated at several tables with the result that one young lady finally held the door open while the mud-stained little dog departed into darkness of the night.

The air of boredom settled down once more upon the library. Students returned again to their less-interesting, if more-profitable tasks—not however without a few regretful sighs.

This Is The Way It Happened

By Miles Elliott
A wedding without a woman? Who said

That such things were not possible. You should have been Here Wednesday. A love affair. Had blossomed in our midst, and we were all

Ignorant of it 'till the very night It happened. It seems a freshman here Became enamoured with a prof, and they,

With what they thought was everyone's consent, Swore to be man and wife. It mattered Not to them that neither was of that fair sex

That most deem necessary to such affairs. They chose Their consort, and we gathered in the chapel To watch the thing take place.

Among our students here are many Who are gifted in sweet music, and all things Melodious. Of these, one Henry Martin May well command the rest. It was his task

To play the organ, a very strange contraption, Not being as most organs are, but looking something like One would expect a shoe-shine box to look.

But this Martin boy contrived, by his uncanny skill, to beat

Therefrom a tune, which all present recognized as "O Promise Me." And to that uncertain rhythm

The singer sang—'twas handsome John McCrae, who was rewarded By thunderous applause for such a noble effort,

Howbeit while he sang his garters troubled him No little bit, as they seemed set on dropping

To the floor. But those two men did well. And did full honor to the glad occasion.

Now when they had ceased, the wedding train began, With music playing softly all the while.

Our honored physics prof, whom all the boys Of scientific mind so dearly love, was in his glory.

His entrance was indeed A credit to his bearing. Something about his step

And mein suggested that famed star Of Hollywood. His very figure was the counterpart

Of blonde Mae West, and some did say That in peculiar places he resembled her

As closely as a photograph. (I have since learned That six pair of sox were used in making

Home-Coming Features Dutch Treat Barbecue

Pool Drive Fund Goes Up To $560

New Plans Outlined Today And Tomorrow Last Day. Drive Headquarters Moved To O. D. K. Circle

Five hundred and sixty-five dollars have been placed in the swimming pool fund to date according to a report submitted to KSK last night by Charles Stuckey, secretary-treasurer of the drive.

University alumni have responded to the appeal by donating $215, while faculty and employees have contributed the same amount. The student body has been responsible for only $130, the girl's KSK for $25 and the boy's KSK for $50. Euphrosynean literary society gave $10, making a total of $645. With $80 in expenses deducted for the total, there remains $565. Expenses consisted mainly in mailing an appeal to the alumni and having signs printed.

Further plans to raise money include a canvassing of the alumni at the picnic on the campus tomorrow, distribution of several thousand circulars, and collection of a free will offering at the game, it was brought out at the meeting.

When you cross the campus today and tomorrow you will see a giant poster near the ODK circle indicating that there is where you may contribute to the pool fund. Some member of KSK will be there to receive the money from eight until one o'clock.

The drive closes on Saturday, which will be the last day for contributions.

Game Holds Spotlight

Gamecocks Face Highly Touted Hurricane With Slight Chance To Upset State Title Race

By Dinky Williams
When Furman and Carolina alumni join their sons and daughters at University stadium tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 to see the Hurricane make a desperate effort to blow the feathers out of the Gamecock, there will be unusually high interest manifested due to the peculiar positions of the two schools in the Palmetto race this season.

Now just suppose Carolina were to beat Furman. Then Furman were to beat Clemson. The Tigers have already downed the local boys. Such an occurrence would result in a three-cornered tie in South Carolina football this year.

Alumni Have Banquet
With a large crowd of Carolina alumni attending a huge picnic on the University campus before the game, one of the biggest home-coming days in history is expected. Reservations have been pouring in all week to Barney A. Early, secretary of the Alumni Association, and to Wm. H. Harth, chairman of Carolina's Booster Club. All former University of South Carolina students and their families are invited to attend the dutch treat barbecue dinner. The mammoth feast will be preceded by a parade of the alumni and the Carolina student body which will be led by the Carolina and Furman bands.

The Carolina chapter of the Furman Alumni Association will have an informal dinner at the Friendly Cafeteria for all Furman men. The affair will be attended by the president of Furman, Dr. Ben E. Geer, head coach "Dizzy" McLeod and assistant coach, Lew Hardage.

The most colorful feature of the day will be the two bands from the rival schools. They will meet at the Jefferson Hotel and will lead a long parade down Main Street. Then the Carolina band, clad in their brilliant uniforms of garnet and black, will play for the Alumni members during their barbecue feast. The bands will sit with their respective student bodies during the game, rousing their pep with lively tunes.

At the half, the musical bodies will march onto the field and form their respective letters, "F" and "C". Both bands are composed of approximately 40 pieces and when united in the center of Carolina's beautiful stadium, filled to overflowing with a gay holiday crowd, they will form a picture that the fans will remember for many years after the actual game has been forgotten.

Lawyers Prepare Case In Petigru

Meet In Long Session

Governor's Men Do Research Work In Law Library For State Highway Case

Future members of the South Carolina bar association who went to the law library Saturday and Sunday to study were confronted by National Guardsmen and lawyers of Governor Johnston, preparing the governor's highway cases for supreme court presentation Monday.

Apparently the lawyers had quite a long session with the law books for students who appeared on the scene of action at various times Saturday afternoon and night, Sunday and Sunday night reported that they were holding sway. Mrs. Johnston came over Sunday night with supper for those working there and students present about that time said the lawyers were eating cookies, potato chips and such light snacks.

The National Guardsmen were posted inside the door of the regular library on the second floor of Petigru college apparently to keep crowds from gathering
