Sweet Sheep Soothe Sleep

Announcement of a new statistical service by the University of South Carolina personnel bureau, under direction of W. C. McCall, was made early this week.

The new service has been made possible by the purchase of a new statistical machine which counts sheep for insomnia victims. It was announced that the machine would be available to students of the University at nominal cost per night.

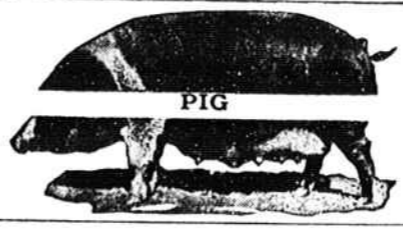

SHEEP NO. 9999

Besides counting the sheep, the machine figures costs of shearing and carding the wool, cost of feeding the flocks, and probable margin of profit to expect from the wool-producing industry engaged in by insomnia victims.

Already the bureau has compiled valuable information through the use of the machine. Records obtained from its use have shown that there is a marked deficit in the production of black sheep. The records show that whereas 10 years ago the average insomnia victim produced one black sheep out of 1,000 images, the number has dropped to 1 out of every 1,000. If this deficiency keeps up, the bureau intends to report to the Bureau of Animal Husbandry of the Department of Agriculture.

Way. Werber Bryan, chairman of the committee in charge of raising funds for a pep song for Carolina, announced yesterday that the fund had been oversubscribed, and that dickerings will begin immediately with well known singers.

Originally set at $10.50, the goal was lowered to $5.95. This amount, Bryan said, has been oversubscribed, making the total collections $5.96.

Bryan hailed the campaign as an outstanding success, commenting that if the students of the University could give a pep song campaign that much support, they could do anything.

The movement to raise the funds was sponsored jointly by I. O. U., boys' society and by P. D. Q., girls' organization.

Zhemale Zhows Ztoker Zenith

Last week in Professor Stoker's astronomy class, Miss Frances Bart was stricken with paralysis of her right arm.

As is the custom of Professor Stoker, he made Miss Bart point to her zenith. Forgetting about the young lady, he went on and lectured to his class. The beautiful but dumb co-ed did not have enough sense to sit down, but stood up with her hand still pointing to her zenith.

Three quarters of an hour passed and class was finally dismissed. The professor asked Miss Bart what she was pointing at her zenith for. She told him that she was doing it upon his request. He laughed and explained that he forgot all about her and that she may put down her hand. She tried to put it down to her side but found it impossible. Professor Stoker immediately rushed her to the hospital.

At the time we went to press, pleasant information was received from the Columbia Hospital. Miss Bart has returned to normal.
