

Results Of Honor Board Questionnaire Announced

200 Infringements Of Honor Principle Noted By Students

With tabulations nearly complete, the results of the campus-wide survey conducted last week by the University honor board were announced this week by Charlie Knowlton, board chairman.

Out of the 4,000 questionnaires examined, five and one-half per cent reported having noticed violations of the honor principle while 94½ per cent reported no violations seen.

One half of the illegal acts were attributed to copying homework while giving or receiving aid on quizzes constituted one-fourth of them. There were only a few scattered observations of copying lab or parallel reports and copying from textbooks or notes during quizzes, Knowlton said.

With the exception of the school of commerce, which reported 88 violations of the honor principle, the number of reported dishonest acts were well-scattered over the various schools of the University he said. Students reported 200 infringements, the second highest number, in the chemistry department. The majority of these occurred when students were seen copying laboratory reports, the questionnaires revealed.

The questionnaires showed that only seven per cent of the students questioned do not have a clear understanding of what constitutes a violation of the honor principle. The honor board has made no plans as yet for explaining the principle to this minority of the students. With the majority of the violations appearing in freshman and sophomore classes, the honor board is now considering ways of orientating freshmen in the honor principle is being observed in.

Another object of the survey is to inform each professor how well the Honor Principal is being observed in his classes, Knowlton said. Each professor has been or will see the results of the questionnaires.

"I think that the survey is a fairly accurate, although not infallible," commented Knowlton. "The results, with the possible exception of those from the school of commerce, can be considered good for a school as large as Carolina." He added that the honor board had made no plans concerning further action on the matter.

The topic discussed last week by the groups organized in most of the tenements was, "The means and the end." The sixth and last in the series of meetings will discuss "creative love in action."

Mr. R. G. Bell, YM secretary in talking of the close-running groups stated that no new members will be admitted for the next meeting but visitors coming from tenements not organized into forums may be counted toward the final scores.

Euphs Debate Manpower Problem

Negative Winners Argue Against Drafting Labor

Resolved: That manpower should be drafted for wartime industry was the subject of debate at the weekly meeting of the University Euphrasian literary society, Tuesday night.

Morris Mazursky, Thurmon Duncan, and Dan Brown composed the affirmative team. The negative team, winner of the debate, was composed of Isadore Bernstein, Calvin McLaughlin, and Raymond Swartz.

The affirmative side pointed to the defects in the present manpower set-up, citing these defects as reasons for acute manpower shortages in many areas. They proposed a three-point plan for the drafting of manpower: first, co-ordination of war industries; second, co-ordination of agriculture and a war industry; third, a co-ordination board for equalization of salaries according to the rise in the cost of living of the drafted workers.

The negative side stated that it is entirely un-American to draft free labor, this being against a Constitutional provision. They emphasized the fact that President Franklin D. Roosevelt is opposed to the policy of drafting manpower. The negative team cited the opinion of William L. Green, president of the AF of L that it would be foolish to use the methods to win the war that we are now fighting against.

YM-YW Retreat Will Be Held Here If Plans Work Out

Committee To Handle Functions Are Chosen In Flinn Hall Today

The spring "Y" retreat will be held on the University campus beginning next Friday afternoon and lasting throughout Sunday, according to tentative plans announced this week by Ken Sallenger, president of the retreat.

Sallenger said that plans to hold the retreat at Camp Long, near Aiken, cannot be carried through because camps are no longer available as a result of the transportation and food difficulties.

If the retreat is held on the campus as is now planned, the girls will stay in the women's dormitories and the boys will stay in the tenements. Food will be served in the cafeteria in the basement of Wade Hampton. Speakers at the conference of several hundred South Carolina college "Y" delegates will be Dr. Claude Evans, Rev. Maxie Collins, and Mr. Henry Ware, southern secretary of the YMCA.

Other phases of the program will be arranged by the "Y" association of other campuses, whose representatives will be here.

Schools expected to be represented at the retreat are: Columbia College, Clemson, Furman, Winthrop, Converse, Coker, Citadel, Newberry, Erskine and Limestone.

Committees for handling various functions will be selected at the "Y" meeting in Flinn Hall Friday.
