Senate to ask resignation of SGA cabinet member

By JIM WANNAMAKER
Editor-in-chief

A member of the Student Government cabinet will be asked to resign at today's meeting of the Student Senate.

The request will be made by the Senate Registration and Distribution Committee, chaired by Sen. Chip Galloway. Galloway refused comment other than saying that a closed session of the Senate will be requested with a report to the student body to be made afterwards.

The officer will be charged with keeping a grade book without authorization, changing class classifications on 125 fee cards, admitting students to the Science Annex during registration before they were eligible to pick up their registration packets and unauthorized distribution of registration packets. The Gamecock learned from a reliable, informed source.

Student Body President Barry Knobel said that he has been shown no conclusive evidence: "It's just one man against another. I'm not going to call him (the officer) a liar."

"I can't see the reasoning behind this. There are a number of programs we want to finish this semester. I don't know what good will come of it."

Knobel and the officer both declined to comment on the extent the incident was discussed at the cabinet meeting last night, but indications were that it was a firey one.

Knobel said he would not take part in the debate before the Senate. The officer declined to comment, but indications are that he will argue his own case before the body.

In a letter to the editor in Friday's Gamecock, Galloway wrote that "one (1) member of Student Government...did up-validate a number of his friends' fee cards."

Galloway declined to comment whether this was part of the affair.

The committee met in closed session Sunday night and unanimously passed a bill of recall. The bill would allow the censure of student officials for infractions of rules.

45 tape players stolen

In the past six months more than 45 tape players have been stolen from parked automobiles on and in surrounding areas of the USC campus.

George Key, director of security and communications at USC, said that there was no set pattern in the thefts. He said that these thefts may occur anytime during the day and night and cited a robbery at McMaster which occurred at 10 a.m.

Captain Grover H. Lynch, campus policeman, said that most offenders are young people who feel the ownership of a tape is essential. He said, "There seems to be a general feeling of somebody took mine, so I'll take yours."

Captain Lynch said that one problem the police force has is the ease offenders have in breaking into automobiles. Thieves can break into a locked car in 15 seconds with a wire coat hanger or break a window to gain entrance. Captain Lynch said that another problem the police force has is the students themselves. He said, "You see a lot of boys out in these parking areas who appear to be working on their cars. They get insulted if you ask to see their student identification and that's how a lot of offenders slip by."

Lack of serial numbers or other identification makes it virtually impossible to trace a stolen tape player, therefore recovery has been almost nonexistent.

Captain Lynch said that the police force is concentrating more on parking areas where thefts have occurred most frequently. "Our problem has decreased in recent weeks because of better police coverage," Lynch said.

Poll indicates grass popular

More than half of the 1,713 students answering FREAK's recent drug survey say they have smoked marijuana, according to figures released this week by FREAK.

FREAK said 867 students reported using marijuana or its derivatives, while 846 said they had not. "Frequent users" numbered 416, "occasional" 350, and "only once" 101.

"This is not intended to be a statistically accurate survey for this school," FREAK said, noting the survey was done randomly. "We don't maintain that since 51 per cent of those interviewed said they had or were presently smoking marijuana that such a percentage would be accurate for the school. "However, we feel that our informal survey provides us with a few sound figures to work with."

The survey was taken independently of a recently completed administration-sponsored poll on drug use.

Other figures included:

---hallucinogens, 464 said they've used, 1249 said no.

---amphetamines, 1,032 yes, 681 no.

---opiates, 260 yes, 1453 no.

---drug store highs, 293 yes, 1420 no.

---barbituates, 413 yes, 1300 no.

In addition, 835 students--48 per cent of those interviewed--said they had used drugs illegally on campus, 600 admitted to buying drugs on campus, and 375 admitted to selling drugs illegally, according to FREAK.

"The figures were compiled, checked and double-checked, and all results...are completely honest, to the knowledge of those recording the results," the group said. "We assumed that, if not all, at least most of those filling out the surveys were honest about their activities."

SGA to lower ring price

By SCOTT DERKS
Staff Writer

The new student government sponsored class ring will sell for three dollars less than originally planned, according to Student Body President Barry Knobel.

"Too many people could not understand that the three dollar profit the student government made on the rings was going for a scholarship fund. For that reason we have decided to drop the profit from the price," Knobel said.

By dropping the profit making aspect of the ring, the student government is no longer required to obtain permission to raise funds through the sale of rings.

"The administration was upset because they thought we were trying to change the ring and were upset over the hour requirements being lowered," Knobel said.

The old ring, considered by the university to be the official ring, will also have the requirements from purchase lowered to 75 hours and a 2.0 GPR, according to Knobel.

Knobel said that this new ring would open up competition in the book store but also added that the proposal to design a new ring was set up by the student executive department and did not have to be approved by the senate.

"The ring representative will be in the Campus Shop on the 18th (today), 19th and 20th to sell rings. This is a student ring, designed by a student committee. "This ring says something to me. On one side of this ring," Knobel stated, "is Capstone and on the other is the Coliseum. Both have been built since I came to Carolina."

AWARE to face charges

AWARE — which nearly lost its charter during an investigation last spring — will be brought before the Student Affairs Committee soon for alleged rule violations.

The violations allegedly occurred at an AWARE-sponsored meeting Feb. 7. The meeting, held to support the padlocked UFO Coffee House, was limited to students plus 50 outsiders, by agreement between AWARE and the administration.

However, Vice President Charles Witten said in a letter to the Student Affairs Committee, the number of outsiders was reportedly "grossly in excess of 50."

The group is also accused of soliciting money without University permission. The Student Affairs Committee, an advisory organ to Witten, will schedule hearings during which officers of AWARE will be present. The committee can recommend to Witten whether disciplinary action should be taken.

Union encourages student awareness

By DONNA BOYD

The University Union has undergone major changes in an attempt to make USC students more aware of the world around them, according to Vicki Eslinger, president of the Union.

"New committees have been formed and old ones improved in order to help USC bring itself up with the campus of the nineteen-seventies," she said.

"The Arts Committee, for example, has come to realize that there is more to art than hanging pictures in the Russell House. Art is Rod McKuen. Art is music. Art is fashion. The committee will begin to move in these directions," she commented.

One of the Union's new committees is the Spirit Committee headed by Trish Owen. This group was formed in order to do something about "the pathetic student spirit on campus," Miss Eslinger said.

"This does not involve only basketball and football, but such sports as soccer and rugby as well," she continued.

The provisional Short Courses Committee is one that is especially in need of student participation and ideas, the Union president said.

"This committee is newly established and will be made permanent if it is given the needed support," she noted.

Miss Eslinger commented that Mario Beguiristain has done "an excellent job in heading the Films Committee." Under him such modern films as "Blow Up" and "The Planet of the Apes" have been scheduled to be shown on campus, as well as a series of underground films.

Miss Eslinger said that the scheduled showing of the underground movies is "an example of the students 'growing up'."

One of the Union's long range projects is an attempt to book the musical "Hair" on campus next fall. The Union has scheduled the Chicago Transit Authority to perform on April 11 and the Tams and the Hot Nuts later in the semester.

Besides revision of its committees, the Union is also attempting to define its function on the campus.

"We are trying to find out whether we are merely a programming organization or if we have control of the Russell House and its activities," Miss Eslinger said.

Another amendment which the Union is considering concerns the election of the Union's president. At present the student body elects the president in the spring along with other major university officers.

"We are now considering three possibilities for this election," Miss Eslinger commented. "The election may be closed only to active Union members. The president may be elected by members of the various committees and the Student Senate or by the Executive Board composed of the committee chairmen and the Senate."

The Union president stressed the need for students to participate in the group's activities and to provide the organization with their suggestions and complaints.

"All of the committees have open membership. If you don't like the way things are being run, join the appropriate committee and vote," she urged.

"Only in this way will USC be able to keep pace with other universities throughout the nation."

Idle dorm cafeteria may reopen soon

By JIM WANNAMAKER

The Men's Towers cafeteria may re-open this spring, and with non-Slater management.

The cafeteria, along with the one in South, was closed during the semester break because of declines in business for ARA-Slater, which manages the campus food service.

Serious consideration is being given to re-open the Towers cafeteria under a local independent operator, according to Douglas I. Fitzgerald, food service coordinator in the office of Harold Brunton, vice president for business affairs.

Fitzgerald said that the operator may well be one of the two restaurant operators displaced by the construction of a new law school and advanced education center between Main and Assembly streets. One has been shown the cafeteria and was very impressed with the facilities.

An immediate test for the spring is best, Fitzgerald said, because that would give indications of what is best for fall use of the facility.

If there is tremendous response to the test, it could be continued next fall, he said. If the test is moderately successful, it could be evaluated and perhaps continued, perhaps replaced by a voluntary meal plan and reduced-size cafeteria. If it is a complete flop, "something else could be tried."

Also considering the future of the cafeteria is a joint Student Government-residence hall committee.

The committee is also leaning toward an independent, local operator, but is also considering institutional services and student-board management.

Joe Azar is going to N. C. State to study the student-board-managed cafeteria there and John Blackshire is going to Winthrop College to study the SAGA-managed cafeteria system there.

Blackshire said that the committee is considering the Towers cafeteria only because of the Slater bakeries at South.

He said that the committee plans a meeting soon with Brunton and Fitzgerald, but plans deliberate study before making any recommendations: "We are more concerned with next fall."

Members of the committee are Blackshire, Ed Allen, Walter Goodson, Butch Parnell and Tom Dillillo, all from the Towers; Gail Haselden and Sharon Dry from Sims and representing the South area; and Joe Azar, Barry Knobel's representative from Student Government.

Before it was closed, the cafeteria offered both cafeteria service and a snack bar operation. Both were gradually phased out. Fitzgerald speculated that a new operator would reinstate both.

Use of the facility as a rathskeller or night club with beer is impossible as the board of trustees maintain their policy of not seeking beer permits for campus, he affirmed.
