Children—tangibles of International Week

By SCOTT DERKS
Associate Editor

"It's like they are your own kids, you look at them and feel like a parent." Barney Oliver, Chairman of the International committee picked up a few of the pictures. "The big thing is they are everyone's children. These kids were the theme of International Week and it was everyone who contributed pennies, dimes, nickles to make this possible," Oliver said.

'Peace Through Understanding'
The week of Nov. 15-21 the International committee launched a plan to adopt 10 children in relation to their "Peace Through Understanding" theme. "We just wanted to help some little kid in a foreign country," Oliver said. "The kid has got to grow up and have a better outlook if he is helped. We are not asking for anything of him, we just want to give him a chance.

"We plan to continue this program every single year and keep the nine children. It is hoped that we will be able to get one more child soon and have ten children.

"If we can build the International Week program we dream about, maybe we can bring one or two of the children to USC to college when they get older.

"Man, It's a big dream, I know, but it is worth it if we can do it. I swear I think it can be done," Oliver said.

Kites Flying

Oliver again picked up the pictures of the children. "You look at the things that these kids like to do. This one likes to fly kites, he said and held up a picture of Ezequiel Soares da Silva Filho. "All we have to do is help this kid, maybe send him a kite for his birthday and it would be the biggest thing in his life. I can't wait to get the letters from the kids.

"We can watch them grow up and see how they are doing. It's a good feeling seeing these kids pictures. It made all of the members of the International Committee feel like that week was worth the time.

"We spend time and a little bit of material stuff, money, and look--these kids are the result--just think of the good we can do. That is what we get from these kids."

Singapore Twins

After thumbing through the pile of pictures again, Oliver admitted that the twins from Singapore were his favorites--Then Yuen Onn and his brother. "I can't explain why, its just because of the way they look. They have got that look to be a favorite.

"But then I guess everyone can have their favorite, this was a University project and everyone can feel like they belong to one of these children. They just pick a favorite."

and more than 250 onlookers. The one on Sunday night had more than 100 people carrying candles. As Bill "Jessie" Siebert, a demonstrator, put it, "This is the first anti-war protest held off campus. In perspective, this is fantastic." He also remarked that the crowd Saturday was half soldier and half student, while the demonstration Sunday was predominately non-students.

The only unpleasant incident at the two days of protest involved an irate spectator. One soldier became so angry at the demonstrators he called them "commies" and pigs." He knocked signs away from several picketers and tore up some signs. After several minutes he left.

Columbia city policemen, directing traffic across the street said the demonstration was on state property and they had no jurisdiction there.

Pres. Jones addresses trainees

University President Dr. Thomas F. Jones spoke at his son's graduation from basic training January 28, at Fort Jackson.

Jones' son, Private James B. Jones, graduated with the 4th Battalion, 1st Training Brigade.

Commenting on his son's graduation, Jones said "I had the opportunity to observe at first hand the growth and development of one of your number, and if you have given your best to this experience, as I know most of you have, you are going to walk out of here today with some qualities that are going to help you throughout life."

Jones told the class that those interested in higher education should visit the USC campus, "where you will be welcomed at our door."
