S.C. Arts Commission Gives grant to student

The National Science Foundation and the National Endowment for the Humanities now have programs which will allow the undergraduate to conduct research.

The student-oriented Studies Program of the National Science Foundation is presently requesting proposals from student groups consisting of five to fifteen students to be involved in the proposed project. The problem oriented study that is to be conducted must be of a scientific nature and should be approached from a variety of disciplines.

Any interested student should seek out a faculty member having interests in the proposed area of study. The faculty member will serve in an advisory position during the project. The study should be conducted on a full-time basis for ten to twelve weeks during the summer months of 1973. Students may earn up to $80.00 a week while working on the project.

The deadline for proposal submission is November 30. The National Endowment for the Humanities has a "Youth Grant" program for the support of humanities projects initiated and conducted by young people. Undergraduate, graduate and young faculty are eligible to submit proposals to the Youth Grant Program.

This program offers youth an opportunity to explore their own interests in the humanities and to enlarge their educational and social experience. The individual, whether he analyzes a treatise or applies his historical and philosophical knowledge to serious contemporary issues, can develop initiatives and experience useful to him all of his life.

The deadline for proposal submission of a Youth Grant proposal is December 3, 1972.

Further information may be obtained about these programs by calling the Office of Research at 8145 or 3195.

The S. C. Arts Commission granted a USC student $250 to produce a film as part of his Contemporary University project.

Ric Hickman said the film would be about the "human conditions of pain, joy and suffering" and be about 50 minutes long. The media will be Super 8 color with stereo sound.

Hickman, who played with nationally known groups in New York and Boston, is composing and playing his own music.

One of two people in CU who received grants from the Arts Commission, Hickman said, "I talked my way into it. I had a written proposal made rather than another film to show, which could have been in my favor since I didn't have a bad film to show the Commission."

Ideas for the movie came from the Bible, medieval manuscripts, sculptors and paintings, Hickman said. "The sound track and the film will be run oppositely. The sound track will go forward in time while the film goes back," he said.

The film will be exhibited in the USC Film Exposition this December, which is also a CU project sponsored by Tommy Price, and "May possibly be shown on ETV," Hickman said.
