Jackson stands only 5-9, 172, but, if he can avoid injury, his quickness could bolster the USC backfield.

The leading rusher of a year ago returns to star in the offensive running picture in the person of Jay Lynn Hodgkin. Hodgkin doesn't display the breakaway threat of Zipperly, but he has shaken loose at times for long gains and his dependable running could prove more beneficial in the course of the season.

Also in the backfield figures to be freshman Bobby Simpson.

Tom Amrein, expected to be a starter, was lost because of a freak injury sustained during practice which has sidelined him for the season.

The same factor which caused the decline and the fall of the pro game here at USC could prove equally devastating to the veer attack. However this season, Carolina's offensive line figures to be much improved. "The basic difference between this year's and last year's team will be the offensive line," said Dietzel. "This line is older and more experienced.

"Rick Anthony and Darrell Austin are as good side-by-side lineman as we've ever had here," said Dietzel.

USC's line features three seniors and two juniors.

Traditionally defense is the strong point of USC's squad and this year's defenders have the potential to retain the tradition. The secondary features three varsity men of a year ago in C.Z. Wilson, Thad Rowe and Mel Baxley. Playing the fourth slot is soph Henry Laws.

Should injuries plague the secondary, as they did last year, USC should be in for some bombing raids, because the backups are all inexperienced.

Dietzel labels Dana Carpenter as "the anchor of the defense." "He's a heckava kid, a fine leader and the rest of the boys think a lot of him." Despite the publicity given to All-American John LeHeup last year it is generally acknowledged that Carpenter's play stole the show. Carpenter paced the team with 131 tackles.

The line is generally young but features the talent to come through. Grahl Phillips, Phil Wallace, Bob Roe and Carpenter comprise the line.

Linebacking will fall to Bill Cregar, and ex-running back, and Tony Pepper.

"I like the attitude of this team," said Dietzel. "I like the way they're working. We've had a good fall practice."

And so, entering the season, which features some very tough opponents, Carolina fans can look for excitement and perhaps a winning campaign. One thing for certain, the excitement of a new veer offense will be present.
