Biologist To Manage USC Coastal Center

The USC Belle W. Baruch Coastal Research Institute has named G. Stuart Ballard of Pawley's Island resident manager of its new marine field laboratory near Georgetown.

Ballard will be in charge of the new laboratory's operations and will coordinate research studies involving the marshes and estuaries and coastal waters, according to Dr. F. John Vernberg, director of the Institute which is on the USC main campus in Columbia.

The laboratory, located on the unspoiled North Inlet estuary of Hobcaw Barony, the Baruch plantation near Georgetown, contains more than 5,000 square feet of space with 10 separate laboratory segments in addition to a seminar room.

The facility Ballard will manage will allow scientists to conduct long-term studies, on location, in the marshland area, especially those projects dealing with the problems of culturing marine animals in their natural habitat.

"A CHILD'S WORLD OF DISCOVERY" College of Early Learning

Applications for admission are now being accepted by the College of Early Learning. Applying Montessori techniques to sound epistemological theory, the College of Early Learning's "Environment for Discovery" offers a unique type of educational process. Placing primary emphasis on the educational period wherein the individual may increase his intellect, rather than merely his store of knowledge, the College of Early Learning admits students between the ages of two and six years. The learning environment is enhanced by a 6-1 student-teacher ratio. If you would like your child to have the opportunity of the best educational environment available at the most important phase of academic achievement.

Contact the College of Early Learning for a mutual interview; telephone (803) 782-6443 or write, College of Early Learning, P.O. Box 1972, Columbia, S.C. 29202
