The Apple Student Loan-to-Own Program is a unique new plan that helps college students to purchase an Apple® Macintosh® computer. It's a special low-interest loan designed exclusively for the parents of undergraduate and graduate students who do not qualify for traditional student assistance programs or who need to supplement federally sponsored aid.

The Apple Student Loan-to-Own Program

makes the borrowing process easy. Unlike credit cards, personal credit lines, or home-equity loans, it lets your parents borrow on their own signature, with no collateral required. There's no need to show financial hardship. And repayment is just as easy, because the Apple Student Loan-to-Own Program lets your parents spread their payments over as many as 10 years-which makes for exceptionally affordable monthly payments.

The loans are available for a minimum of $2,000 for each student. The interest rate is tied to the rate of the 91-day United States Treasury Bill (T-bill)—and is typically much lower than the rates of other consumer loans. But even though this figure may fluctuate a little from month to month, monthly payments will remain constant for a year at a time, because they are established at the beginning of each 12-month period.
