

'Chicago City Limits' hits big

By STEPHEN GUILFOYLE
Staff writer

CPU's Cultural Arts brought a little slice of Chicago's special kind of comedy — improvisation — to the Koger Center Thursday night. Chicago City Limits, a five-member comedy team from the Windy City, as well as their pianist, filled the Koger Center with its first batch of non-stop laughs for about two hours.

Most of the show was prepared bits instead of improvisation. One bit showed a nameless man brought into a waiting room. The secretary sticks her tongue out at the man and proceeds to make a dozen more faces at the man, who eventually starts making faces back.

Then another person comes out and addresses the man, saying "The president will see you now, Vice President Quayle."

Review

In another segment, the five members sing the evening news — "Jimmy took crack, so he don't care, Jimmy took crack so he don't care, Jimmy took crack so he don't care, he burned his brain to mush."

The two major improvisational numbers were the highlight of the evening, though. In one, the audience yelled out two phrases, one to begin and one to end the skit. Unfortunately, the ending phrase was "What's that snot doing on your dress."

In the other, four cast members have to play a kind of charades for the fifth, trying to get him to guess a common phrase he might not be familiar with.

Again, a rather quick-witted member of the audience made things difficult for the cast by yelling a phrase distinctly South of the Mason-Dixon — "Ain't no such critters."

It took a while and more than one reference to "The Beverly Hillbillies," but the lone cast member finally got it.

More than 1,500 showed up for the show on a very rainy night, so it was a big winner for CPU's Cultural Arts.

Chicago City Limits is directed by Linda Gelman and includes five cast members: Carol Bugge, Jeff Clinkenbeard, Carl Kissin, Suzanne Hevner and Harry Pritchett.

The group teaches improvisation classes for all skill levels. If interested, call (212) 772-8707.

Cultural Arts' next program is Student Art '89, April 9 in the Russell House Lobby.
