Senator supports state lottery, will submit bill for direct vote

By The Associated Press

ANDERSON — A state senator who is a longtime lottery proponent says the rush for tickets at courier services does not surprise him, and he plans to introduce a lottery referendum bill for the sixth consecutive year.

"I already know that people want to gamble," said Sen. Ryan Shealy, R-Lexington. "They ought to be given the opportunity. We're playing it. We're just sending the money somewhere else."

A courier service in Spartanburg that sold over 24,000 Florida lottery tickets last week provided at least two people winnings of $4,488 because they had five of six matching numbers.

A Spartanburg man and a Charlotte man both called Kwik Pik Xpress on East Main Street to relay tales of their luck, but had not picked up their tickets as of Sunday, the Spartanburg Herald Journal reported.

Courier services, controversial because prosecutors say they violate state gambling laws, take orders for tickets, buy legal lottery tickets then bring them back to South Carolina.

Although Shealy is proposing the bill again, he agrees with other legislators that Statehouse scandals may lessen the chance of a referendum bill passing.

"I think all the ethical bills are going to overshadow the majority of legislation," said Rep. Lanny Littlejohn, R-Pacolet.

The General Assembly could vote to place a referendum on a ballot asking South Carolina voters whether or not they want a lottery, but the legislators would still have to vote on a statewide lottery bill.

Rep. Toney Farr, D-Union, said there are indications of increased interest in a lottery, but ethics legislation will probably dominate when the General Assembly convenes in January.

However, Rep. Al McGinnis, R-Duncan, said he believes a lottery referendum will be one of the biggest issues in the forthcoming session.

"I don't think it even coincides in a remote way with the ethics issue," he said.

Rep. Carole Wells, R-Spartanburg, said the Statehouse scandals may make lottery and pari-mutuel betting proponents hesitate before introducing bills to allow such gambling.

"I've always said I'd vote against it, but I have no problem letting the people decide," Wells said.

But Farr and other Upstate politicians have said they would vote for a statewide referendum on a lottery.

"I think we've got to face up to the fact that we have a large part of the population that wants to participate in that sort of thing," said Rep. Alf McGinnis, R-Duncan.

"What we're seeing is the surfacing of what's always been there — people taking a chance," he said.

Sen. Horace Smith, D-Spartanburg, has not supported even a referendum, but he's leaning that way.

"I think the feeling in the state is there needs to be a vote on it," Smith said of a statewide lottery.

"I've opposed a lottery all my political career, but I'm about ready to put it to the voters," he said. "Times have changed and people have changed."

Rep. Ralph Davenport, R-Boiling Springs, opposes gambling, but has discovered people in his district support a lottery.

Davenport said that in 800 responses to a survey he did two months ago, 55 percent of the people supported a lottery, while 45 percent opposed one.

indicate the majority or an outrage or consensus."

In fact, after removing the poster, the store had more people complaining "than we were giving in," Morris said.

"There are people who make it their careers to complain about anything they feel is not exactly what they would like to perceive or hear," he said.

He also believes this act is a waste of taxpayer's money to send police to take the time to ask a store to remove a poster from its window.

"It is an outrage that a public official, with the crime rates we have in this country, would spend the time poking through stores to determine what posters should be displayed," Singmaster said.

When asked if he would follow up on the issue of obscenity, he said he would first need to be served an official letter.

Link said he has not deemed the poster offensive at this point. An arrest would need to be made before the poster could be labeled offensive.

to work with them on this." He said it is within his authority under South Carolina's obscenity statutes.

Carl Singmaster, the owner of the four Manifest stores in the state, said he does not believe that "any government official has any business telling us what we can or cannot display in our store."

"Anyone who clearly looks at that poster can determine very quickly that it is a piece of art," Singmaster said. "It is not a depiction of human nudity. I don't understand this officer's concern."

However, Singmaster said, if members of the community complained about the poster, he would take it down. Only one complaint, was filed with the police department. Singmaster said "one complaint in a community the size of Clemson, to me, does not seem to
