US MARINE CORPS

OFFICER CANDIDATE CLASS PROGRAM

The OCC program provides a college senior or graduate with the opportunity to earn an active duty commission as a Second Lieutenant in the Marine Corps. Each year, three Officer Candidate School classes meet at Quantico, Virginia. One in June, Oct. and Feb. The Officer Selection Team in South Carolina is allowed to submit three applications per class. You are screened to determine if you are academically, physically, and morally fit to wear the distinguished "Eagle, Globe, and Anchor" of an Officer of the Marines. Your application is then forwarded to Washington, D.C. where a board convenes to select the best, nationwide, from each State's submissions. If selected, you go on to OCS and a rigorous ten week training and evaluation period to allow the Corps a look at you, and give you a look at the Corps. At the end of the seventh week, you may drop from the program without any obligation to the Marine Corps. If you graduate, you will be commissioned a Second Lieutenant of Marines and serve a 3 1/2 year obligation (8 yrs for jet pilots).

The occupational fields cover a broad range of specialties from the combat Fleet Marine Forces to support billets such as finance and law. No matter which you choose, the most important aspect is simply the title — "Officer of Marines". It means being part of an elite fraternity of men who still believe in honor, pride, and character. It means responsibility. Responsibility for millions of dollars worth of equipment and the very lives of other men. Responsibility to the people of this nation to preserve our way of life. With this responsibility comes experience, and with experience maturity. The junior officer is readily sought out by the business world for his ability to work with and direct people, dedication to achieving goals, and experience. That's why 175 of the Fortune 500 corporations in America are being run by former Marines. The Corps is the smallest branch of the Armed Forces, yet produces an inordinate amount of this Nations leadership. Our secret for success is taking ordinary people and making Marines out of them. From there, all else follows.
