that the State Tax Commission told Harpootlian to begin prosecution for state income tax evasion by Holderman. Harpootlian, however, would not comment on this Tuesday. Neither Holderman nor his attorneys would comment after the hearing on what he would do now.

Holderman resigned as president of USC in May under fire for his extravagant spending. He is currently vice chairman for two of USC donor Ira Koger's real estate companies in Jacksonville, Fla.

Koger did not return phone messages Tuesday.

Holderman's forfeit of his passport does not mean he cannot leave the country, Harpootlian said. It only means he has to get the court's permission to leave the United States.

King and Vernon were told their client would be allowed to continue travel within the continental United States for business reasons as long as he cleared his arrangements with the court beforehand.

The charges against Holderman stem from a report that Holderman received $25,000 in payments from the McNair Law Firm of Columbia to help a client elude a jail sentence in the Dominican Republic on drug charges.

The law firm said the $25,000 Holderman received was supposed to be a donation to the much-maligned USC Research and Development Foundation and was not to be used by Holderman for personal reasons.

versity president appoints the other two.

Palms would not comment on the possibility of assigning a new foundation except to say, "I would like to see a broader statewide representation on the board."

Palms has previously focused on the foundation's relationship to research and the university's "intellectual property." The intellectual property includes copyrights, patents and royalties on various items developed by faculty. In recent years, the foundation has taken on a larger role in sponsoring faculty research.

The review committee, that is scheduled to meet again April 25, was appointed by foundation president Gayle O. Averyt to examine the foundation's functions and to make recommendations about what role the organization should play in the university's future.

The foundation has been under scrutiny for its extravagant spending, especially the money it provided to former university President James Holderman.

Holderman, who resigned from the university in May, was indicted in March on charges of using a public office for personal gain and receiving extra compensation.

During Holderman's reign, the foundation collected private donations that provided him with salary supplements, expense money and gift money to guests and famous people he brought to the university.

The foundation's original purpose was to help the university acquire and sell real estate. The foundation used money from real estate transactions to pay for scholarships, other academic programs or underwriting construction projects such as the Koger Center for the Arts.

"Over the last year, during this most important campaign that he ever ran, Lee may have grown the most," said Gov. Carroll Campbell. "Lee won that campaign. He was at peace with himself, at peace with his fellow man and at peace with his God."

Harry Dent, a former Richard Nixon campaign aide who is now a lay minister in Columbia, focused much of his sermon on Atwater's zeal for Christianity after he was stricken.

"I was privileged to be a witness to that miracle, for which I will be forever grateful," Dent said, his voice cracking.

During the last year of his life, Atwater apologized to Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and two South Carolina liberal Democrats for remarks he made about them during campaigns.

Dent called those efforts "repentance."

"Yes, Lee Atwater believed in that golden rule, and in his way, he preached it," Dent said.

Atwater began working for Republicans in the 1970s, while still at Newberry College. Like many young Republicans in South Carolina, he got his start working for the senior U.S. Sen. Strom Thurmond.

"He was energetic, and he rattled his opponents," Thurmond said at Monday's funeral.

"He had a sixth sense when it came to politics," said Campbell, whom Atwater helped in numerous legislative, congressional and gubernatorial campaigns.

Later, Atwater worked as a regional coordinator in 1980 for Ronald Reagan, and then worked in the White House during Reagan's first term as president. Atwater left for private business, but in the late 1980s began setting up the presidential bid of George Bush.

After the 1988 campaign, Bush rewarded Atwater with a job he once held: chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Bush did not attend Monday's ceremony; the White House said he would instead attend a memorial service Thursday in Washington.

Secretary of State James Baker, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, White House Chief of Staff John Sununu and several other Bush administration officials also attended Monday's funeral. Bush's son, George Bush Jr., attended.

France to attend an educational conference, according to a complaint issued by the NIE workers to the Inspector General's office.

"Whenever anyone started to know more than they actually did, he moved them to a different department of the NIE. He was very careful in his actions, always trying to save face in the public," the official said.
