On April 3, still another agency, the General Accounting Office, opened fiscal probes of the Harvard Medical School, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the University of California at Berkeley.

In South Carolina, the grand jury indicted USC's former President James Holderman for allegedly misusing campus funds. The state's law enforcement division — SLED — as well as the Internal Revenue Service have also entered the fray with their own investigations of funds and appropriations during Holderman's 13-year reign.

Even the appearance of such improprieties — as well as the deluge of stories about serious campus crimes, postgame student riots and tuitions rising faster than the inflation rate — have consequences.

They could, some observers say, cost campuses political support and money.

TAKE VINCE AND LARRY'S
CRASH COURSE IN SAFETY BELTS.

LESSON
NO. 1

"As you know, Larry, pretty soon all cars will come with automatic safety belts or air bags — and I don't mean your mother-in-law!"

"That's right, Vince, but these new automatic gizmos only do part of the job to keep you from being a roadside warrior. You've still got to make sure your safety belt is buckled up."

YOU COULD LEARN A LOT FROM A DUMMY.

"There is real concern that the climate and the impressions that dominated the media stories will be used as justification for reductions in indirect cost recovery mandated by appropriations committees" in Congress, added Robert Rosenzweig, president of the Association of America Universities.

At Stanford, alumni donations have declined 12 percent over the same period this past year since the accusations of misconduct were first made, said Elizabeth Sloan, director of communications for the university's development office.

Apparently fearful of similar wobbling of support, Brown University President Vartan Gregorian authored a column in the Washington Post defending his March decision — often cited as an example of how schools are punishing students for being illiberal — to expel a student for drunkenly shouting racist and ethnic slurs.

ceive a student aid report. This SAR must be submitted to USC's financial aid office by July 1 for the student to be considered for aid for the upcoming academic year beginning in the fall.

Seven major student financial aid programs are offered by the U.S. Department of Education. These programs include Pell Grants, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, College Work-Study, Perkins Loans, Stafford Loans, Plus Loans and Supplemental Loans for Students.

"I received a $1,800 Pell Grant my junior year," USC student Jill St. Peter said. "I had no idea the program was even offered the first two years I was here."

Grants are a form of financial aid students do not have to pay back. Work-Study gives students a chance to work and earn money to help pay for school. Loans are borrowed money that students or parents must repay with interest.

"Each student is assigned a Pell Grant Index number used to determine the maximum amount of aid he or she can receive," Wright said.

The cost of education minus a student's family contribution is the formula the government uses to determine the Pell Grant Index number.

The 1991-92 maximum award offered from the Pell Grant scholarship program is $2,300. How much a student actually gets will not only depend on his Pell Grant Index number, but also on the cost of education at USC, whether he is a full-time student and whether he is attending USC for a full academic year or less than that.

The amount of aid a student may be able to receive from campus-based programs depends on the student's financial need, the amount of other aid he will receive and the availability of funds. When the money is gone, there are no more awards from that program for that year.

Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, College Work-Study and Perkins Loans are campus-based programs because they are administered by the financial administrator at USC.

"Although I was eligible, I missed getting a Perkins Loan because I waited too long to turn in my application," USC junior Diane Denton said.

Wright said about 14 percent of students who applied for a campus-based program didn't receive aid because either the funds had been depleted or all the positions had been filled.

USC offers other forms of financial aid through 11 different colleges to students in specified fields of study. The money to support these scholarships is generated from the alumni and business corporations related to the field of study.
