Coryell said the department requires that all freshmen, transfer students and students who are academically challenged spend a certain amount of time at the center.

"However, 25 percent of the students, who use the center, shouldn't need to use it," he said. "It's a good place to be."

The center is open from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily and is open from 5 to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

"When the need is anticipated, we can have a staff member come and open up the center," Coryell said. "We have more than enough student monitors who are willing and able to make sure nothing is broken or used improperly."

athletes when they enter the work world.

"I've worked in internships, unlike most athletes who don't get a chance to work until their career is over," he said. "Over the summer, most athletes lift or run. I've been able to get work experience like regular students at the university."

Sweet, an accounting major, doesn't have a job lined up after graduation.

"I'm looking for a job," he said. "I want to stay in Columbia, but I'll go where I can find work."

"I'm trying to get a job with the Olympic committee in Atlanta for an internship," Kordonowy said. "I'm scared that I won't get a job in what I want to do."

Still yet, graduation sneaks up on some athletes.

"I really like basketball and college," basketball player Bojan Popovic said. "I still don't realize that this is it. It's about over."

Like these athletes, other students will find out that graduation is not as easy as it seems.

Registrar

Gunter and his staff organize the behind-the-scenes tasks at the Carolina Coliseum — where graduation ceremonies take place.

Alloting each college with a certain amount of seats, reserving sections for family and friends, setting up the stage and placing name tags on each students' chair are also part of the logistics of the ceremony.

Gunter said the university doesn't like to give tickets out for graduation because it may cause problems for students to decide who and who not to invite to their graduation.

Because the Carolina Coliseum holds about 13,000 people, Gunter figures 2,000 graduates may invite up to about six people each.

After the ceremony, which is conducted on an all-or-none basis without a rehearsal, the students' final transcript is submitted to the dean of the respective college for a final audit. A complete record of the student's academic achievement is reviewed in this process and then submitted to the registrar.

If the student is given a final approval, a degree is mailed home which shows the student's name, major and any honors he or she may have been awarded. Furthermore, Gunter said he sends home a complimentary copy of the student's final transcripts.

"Usually we get through this (commencement) with few errors. Our system keeps getting better and better with technology too," Gunter said.
