U.N. says Serb leader approves aid convoys

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — U.N. officials said Tuesday the leader of Bosnian Serbs promised to allow relief convoys to reach Muslim enclaves besieged in eastern Bosnia. But the convoys were still stuck on the border.

Such promises have not always been fulfilled in the past.

The president of Bosnia's Muslim-led government, Alija Izetbegovic, left Sarajevo for another round of peace talks in New York. The Bosnian Serb leader, Radovan Karadzic, was expected to leave later in the day.

Reports from the eastern town of Srebrenica, overflowing with an estimated 50,000 people, said thousands were living on the streets, many without coats.

But U.N. officials in Srebrenica said Serb shelling seemed to have subsided since the U.N. commander for Bosnia, Gen. Philippe Morillon of France, set up operations there last week in a show of support.

Girls share liver after transplant

PHILADELPHIA — Doctors split a single donated liver for transplants in two girls during a 17-hour operation.

One recipient, Tracy DeVore, 14, of East Stroudsburg in north-east Pennsylvania, was listed in good condition today. Rhea Jackson, 2, of East Orange, N.J., was in fair condition, said Kelly Deno, a spokeswoman at St. Christopher's Hospital for Children.

The operations, involving a total of nine doctors and eight nurses, took from 8 a.m. Saturday to 1 a.m. Sunday. At one point, three operating rooms were in use.

The liver came from a teen-age boy who died in New Jersey.

The liver was sent to DeVore, and because it was healthy and a good size, doctors asked her foster mother if she would let part of the liver go to another child.

Power returns after winter storm

COLUMBIA — Most of the power was back on in South Carolina Tuesday after this weekend's storm, and while there was some crop damage, the bitter cold actually may mean more profits for some Upstate peach farmers, an extension agent says.

Duke Power Co. said Tuesday it had all but about 2,000 customers restored in the Greenville-Spartanburg area. South Carolina Electric & Gas Co. reported Monday night that only about 150 Lowcountry customers lacked electricity.

At the height of the storm, an estimated 159,000 customers lost electricity.

It appears that tomatoes, the early blooming variety of peaches, strawberry plants and several tobacco farms suffered the most from the weekend of severe weather.

Dozier draws power from helping others

STUDENT PROFILE

Melanie Dozier

Melanie Dozier wanted to branch out to "meet and work with all kinds of people from different backgrounds."

Coming from a close-knit circle of family and friends, Dozier, an English junior, came to USC because of the school's diversity.

As a member of Students Educating and Empowering for Diversity (SEED), she is able to put forth her ideas to better relations between different groups. Dozier said this is done by going to different organizations and promoting respect for those who are unlike oneself.

Dozier is also a Minority Assistance Peers program counselor. She gives aid to freshman minorities who may experience some difficulty making the transition from high school to college.

Juggling both school activities and academic demands, Dozier is also a resident adviser for Capstone.

One of Dozier's co-RAs, political science sophomore LaTonia Burrow, said, "Melanie does a good job balancing her responsibilities as an RA and her school activities. I think Melanie is a great person and has a wonderful personality. You can come to her for anything."

Dozier also works closely with Dietra Wilder, an international studies senior.

"Melanie is a really dedicated RA. She can be really fun and then really professional, and that means a lot for a prospective leader," Wilder said.

Before graduating from Manning High School in 1990, Dozier was placed on the Honor Roll for her academic excellence. She later was elected vice president of the Beta Club and was chosen Homecoming Queen her senior year.

Dozier said she is a serious person.

"Even when I'm having fun, I find myself being serious," she said.

Dozier said she is intent on interacting with other people and learning about different cultures.

"I learn about myself from other people, but I'd like to learn more of who I am, and that's going to be hard to do," Dozier said.

After graduating from USC, Dozier plans to attend graduate school in Atlanta where she aspires to become a speech pathologist, after deciding teaching wasn't exactly what she really wanted to do.

"Whatever I do, I want to help people," she said.

The death of her father marked a change in Dozier.

"My father's death four years ago was the turning point of my life. It showed me how selfish I really was because I took a lot of things for granted," Dozier said.

"My father was very strict and, although I loved him very much, I look back to see I never really did anything to show him. That's very hard to live with."

Sixth body found in World Trade Center aftermath

By The Associated Press

Searchers in the rubble beneath the World Trade Center found the body of a hotel purchasing agent who was last seen in the parking area minutes before the bomb exploded. The death toll was raised to six.

The body of 37-year-old Wilfredo Mercado — the last missing victim — was found Monday, more than two weeks after the blast. The first five victims were found within hours of the explosion on Feb. 26 under the 110-story twin towers.

A construction worker removing debris saw a boot sticking out and called Port Authority police. The Port Authority owns the trade center.

The discovery ended a painful vigil by Mercado's wife, Olga, who had come daily to the trade center to await word of her husband's fate.

Repeated searches with dogs had failed to uncover Mercado's remains, which were at the bottom of a crater filled with tons of concrete and other debris.

Mercado was a Peruvian immigrant who came to the United States 14 years ago, learned English and earned a college degree. He worked seven days a week at two jobs to support his wife and two children, Yvette, 10, and Heidi, 3.

He was in charge of a staff of six in the store-room and receiving dock for the Windows on the World restaurant in one of the skyscrapers.

Meanwhile, a former cab driver reportedly sought in the bombing was said by a neighbor Monday to have "carried himself like a militant sort of guy," dressing in fatigues and army boots.

Israel Campos described his former neighbor in Brooklyn's Bay Ridge neighborhood as being in his mid-30s. He said the man lived in the apartment below his until he moved a year ago.

Officials have not publicly identified the man. Newspapers identified him as an Egyptian immigrant who moved to Jersey City, N.J., after leaving Brooklyn.

The Daily News quoted unidentified law enforcement sources as saying the man's name came up in the investigation into the assassination of the anti-Arab extremist Rabbi Meir Kahane.

Newsday said his name was listed on the records of a Jersey City storage locker where investigators found chemicals matching those used in the bomb.

Clemson basketball coach tries to attract home crowd

By The Associated Press

Clemson coach Cliff Ellis is taking unusual steps to try and drum up a crowd for Thursday night's National Invitation Tournament game against Auburn at Littlejohn Coliseum.

He's challenging those who complain about Clemson's schedule to show up — or shut up.

Ellis has also opened a little ticket operation of his own, personally buying 250 student tickets for $1,000 that he will distribute to help increase the crowd.

"I've got to become more than just a basketball coach," he said.

Ellis figures it will take a crowd of at least 7,000 for Clemson, assuming it beats Auburn, to host a second- or third-round game in the NIT next week.

"To go to the next level, we've got to show the support and we've got to show the spirit," Ellis said.

Ticket sales started off slow, with 300 on Monday. By Tuesday afternoon a total of about 1,000 tickets had been sold. It's spring break on campus and no seats are reserved. The school has set prices at the NIT minimum of $8 for adults and $4 for students.

Ellis challenged those who complain that the ACC's Tigers should play more inter-sectional games to prove they're willing to buy a ticket to see a Southeastern Conference opponent.

"Those people who have been talking about wanting to see an inter-sectional game — it's time to put up or shut up," he said. "And if they don't show up, let's not ever talk about it again."

Clemson averaged 6,767 fans for 15 home games this year, the lowest in the ACC and the lowest at Clemson in 23 years.

Clemson hasn't been able to rely on its 17,000 students as fans either. Student attendance at games this year averaged 1,800.

Basketball takes a back seat to football at Clemson, and Ellis pulled out a football analogy in an attempt to get the fans.

"The NCAA (tournament) is the Orange Bowl, Sugar Bowl, Cotton Bowl, Rose Bowl. This is the Gator Bowl or Liberty Bowl," Ellis said. "What we need to do in basketball is take it to the level we took it in football in 1957 or 1960, when it all started."

make the program known to businesses worldwide.

"Third, and very important is fundraising," he said.

The distinction of the ranking proves to businesses that USC's programs are worthy of their support, Moore said.

Graduate student Martin Buerger said he will benefit in the job market because of USC's MIBS program.

Buerger said being associated with the program will put another notch on his resume, and it will give job hunting a more positive aspect.

Planning for the future is a factor that gave the MIBS program its number one ranking, and there are plans in effect aimed at next year's rankings.

MacIwinen said a university-wide marketing and design team will ensure MIBS and the College of Business Administration is ranked next year.
