3. Some women at Two Notch tell you you're living in their old work place.
2. You sleep and shower in the same room.
1. You notice your guests are always holding their nose.

Booklet Provides Job-Hunting Guidance: Many parents worry about their college-age children finding jobs, but it's not every father who writes a book about it. Jack O'Brien gave one of his children an unusual graduation present — a workbook on job hunting.

"An Organized Approach to Getting a Job" offers helpful hints for anyone beginning a job hunt. Some tips include how to plan your job search, where to look for a job, Resume ABCs and how to apply your skills in the workplace. A sample tip from the booklet is to keep a "TO DO" list with suggestions such as this:

- Obtain something of value from each interview or telephone call. Ask the contact person to recommend another contact, or send me further information about the company.
  - Do my homework. It will give me a competitive edge. I will invest the time and do the required research.
  - Work harder and smarter than my competitors. Working hard turns up unexpected opportunities and working smart eliminates time-wasting diversions.
  - Be persistent. Take full responsibility for getting the job I want.
- The booklet, produced by MCI, is free and can be received by calling 1-800-283-5617.

Critic Blames Poor Movies On Young People: Movies are terrible these days, and it's the fault of young people, 54-year-old film critic Rex Reed says.

"Most of today's moviegoers are estimated to be between 15 and 20 years old, which explains why so many sub-mental abominations are being passed off as bogus entertainments," Reed told several hundred people attending a Junior League lecture Wednesday.

Reed waxed nostalgic for the old days "when movies made sense."

"Conditioned by the anti-social habits of TV viewing in the first place, these youngsters have attention spans similar to those of cocker spaniels," Reed said.

"All I want to do is to bring back Fred Astaire," he said.

Carolina Alive marks 20th year of music

From Staff Reports

Bright lights and pounding music will flood the stage at the Koger Center when USC musical group Carolina Alive celebrates its 20th anniversary 7:30 p.m. Saturday.

Alumni and current members will perform some of the country's most loved songs, including popular show tunes, patriotic tributes and Broadway songs.

"Founded in 1973, Carolina Alive has been a musical ambassador for South Carolina and the nation by performing around the world," said Richard Conant, founder and director of the singing group.

In 1979, Carolina Alive participated in the Friendship Ambassador program in Romania. That year, the group also toured Mexico as part of a special cultural exchange program between USC and Our Little Brother orphanage in Cuernavaca, Mexico.

Invited by Egyptian ambassador and President Anwar Sadat, Carolina Alive performed in Cairo and Alexandria in 1980, and they participated in the nation's 50th Inaugural Entertainment Company in Washington, D.C., in 1985. Carolina Alive was also featured at the 1988 World's Fair in Brisbane, Australia.

"Not only has Carolina Alive entertained audiences around the world, they have also performed throughout the Southeast at political and community events, business conventions, banquets, and university functions," Conant said. "They have lit up the stage for presidents Richard Nixon, Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan and George Bush as well as noted celebrities Walter Cronkite, Helen Hayes,

Jimmy Stewart and Minnie Pearl."

"I was fortunate enough to have the opportunity to sing with Carolina Alive during the years we traveled to Mexico, Romania and Egypt," said Jane Key, a former member of Carolina Alive and the director of HELPLINE of the Midlands.

"Carolina Alive taught me to appreciate different cultures and really helped me prepare for the work world," Key said. "I know that I speak for many others when I say that students who have performed with Carolina Alive appreciate the opportunities Dr. Conant gave them."
