Prank leads to revoked parking privileges

MILTON BENTSEN Special to the Gamecock

In an effort to foster better understanding of the campus Judicial Board's role in the Carolina Community, the Judicial Board, in conjunction with The Gamecock, is offering this series of articles about previous disciplinary cases at USC.

These cases, most of which date back several years, will be modified slightly and the names will be changed to protect the identity of charged students and victims. The sanctions that could have been applied to the various cases will be mentioned and explained.

Judicial Board members and the Student Development staff hope these articles will provoke thought about the code of conduct USC students agreed to follow when they joined the Carolina community. The following case study concerns regulations concerning the misuse of university parking decals.

Meredith, an international studies junior, was hanging around with friends one night when they decided to go out for a night of drinking alcohol. After being out for most of the evening, Meredith's friends dared her to steal a parking decal off a car in Blossom Garage. Meredith left her friends to complete the dare. She entered the garage, went up to a car and slowly peeled the garnet, black and white decal off of the car. After getting the sticker off, Meredith ran back to her friends' residence hall room and showed them what she had done.

A couple of days later, Meredith got the idea that instead of paying for her parking sticker for the garage that semester, she would just steal one off another vehicle. The next night, she went to the garage and peeled off another sticker for herself. By placing the stolen decal on her car, Meredith now appeared to have had the privilege of parking in the garage free of charge. However, the individual who had his decal stolen reported it promptly to the university police. They immediately opened a file on the missing sticker.

About 15 days after she had stolen the decal, Meredith parked in a no-parking zone on university property. Coincidentally, a university police officer happened to be in the area. He ran her "new" false parking sticker into the computer and found out it was stolen. When Meredith came back to her car, the officer questioned her and confiscated the stolen parking decal. The officer then referred Meredith to the Office of Student Discipline.

When she met with the university representative to explain what she had done, Meredith elected to appear before the campus Judicial Board. After hearing her case, the J-Board found she had violated university policies related to theft and misuse of university documents. Meredith received the following sanctions: USC would revoke one year of parking privileges, she was to make restitution in the amount of 15 days of garage parking costs and the cost of the victim's new sticker and she was to complete 30 hours of community service. What started out as a mindless prank turned into a university offense that will remain on Meredith's disciplinary record for the remainder of her academic career. Although Meredith was able to park for free for a short time, the consequences will never be worth the damage caused by her actions.

Republicans demand lie-detector test

SUMTER, S.C. (AP) — Two convicted thieves have charged that state Rep. Grady Brown, D-Bishopville, knew he was buying stolen goods from them and now Republicans are demanding he take a lie-detector test to prove his claims of innocence or else give up his office.

GOP Chairman Henry McMaster said the Republican Party has arranged for a lie-detector test to be administered to Brown, who has served in the state House since 1985.

"They're not going to arrange for me to do anything, because this is all politics," Brown told The (Sumter) Item for a Sunday article. "I don't have anything to hide or anything to cover up and at the proper time I will be glad to take a lie-detector test."

Brown was criticized earlier this year when he acknowledged spending campaign funds to pay utility bills, and buy food and insulin for constituents. The law says campaign funds can be used for campaign purposes only.

Brown said he will continue the practice unless the House Ethics Committee decides it is wrong. He has requested a decision.

Brown said two Darlington County brothers lied when they testified on Sept. 29 that Brown knew appliances he bought from them were stolen.

The men got six-year jail terms after pleading guilty to stealing about $90,000 worth of appliances from two Hartsville mobile-home dealerships. The paper did not identify the men.

"They were caught and naturally they are trying to carry me down with them," he said.

Brown said he has canceled checks showing he paid more than $15,000 for appliances. McMaster said that he has reports that show Brown paid $2,000 for the $90,000 in appliances.

in order to expose members to other facets of Greek life.

"We're having women from predominantly black sororities, such as Teresa Wilson from Delta Sigma Theta, to come into our meetings and discuss their processes so we can learn about the similarities and differences between our sororities," Sturkie said.

Sophomore Darcie Shively, head of the multicultural awareness committee, has been actively involved in sponsoring events she feels will offer insight into various cultural issues.

The sorority has planned a S.E.E.D. (Students Educating and Empowering for Diversity) program with other fraternities and sororities, and they have participated in other cultural events on campus.

By heading this committee, Shively hopes to dispel common misconceptions about the involvement of Greeks at USC.

"Greeks are also stereotyped as being exclusive and insensitive to the cultural aspects on campus," she said. "We feel that there are a variety of ethnic backgrounds on campus that can help us learn about other cultures."

ple on campus, it will force people off. The guys are not going to move to Maxcy or Capstone but will move off campus," she said.

McRobie said a lot of students were angry the decision was made on such short notice and without their consent.

"Residents feel upset and snubbed because they weren't consulted. They should have a meeting of Capstone and Preston residents and give at least a week's notice; not like this time when we had an hour," McRobie said. "That's the only way residents will be able to voice their opinions. They feel like it's a done deal."

There are also students, however, who think the proposed change would be beneficial.

"I've heard positive feedback about having a different atmosphere; you can do a wider range of programs having men and women in the hall," Moore said.

"I'm not upset about it," Burrow said. "A lot of residents are (upset) because Capstone has been traditionally women, but then again, people complain about visitation now."

Luna said he welcomes input from staff and residents.

"Residents should make their concerns known through residence hall government, RAs, the RHD or even to call me directly at the office," Luna said.
