McKissick honors former staff member

STEPHANIE SONNENFELD Staff Writer

McKissick Museum is honoring one of its former staff members in an art exhibit running Feb. 26, 1995.

The exhibit features various works by Vincent Suttles, a 1978 graduate of USC, who died in August of this year. Suttles, a Spartanburg native, worked in McKissick's exhibit installation department until his death in 1993.

Although the exhibition features pictures in various forms of mixed media and a few assorted sculptures, Suttles experimented with several realms of art. Suttles was known not only for painting, drawing and printmaking, but performance art as well.

"Vinne was a talented young individual. Personal, complex, spiritual and unpredictable — these are words that describe Vinne, his work and his life," said Lynn Robertson, director of McKissick Museum.

"As an individual, he [Suttles] was very unique and had his own sense of the world. He was a really neat person to get to know because he was very religious and involved with the Catholic Church and at the same time very involved with his art," said Deanna Kerrigan, Curator of Educational Services at McKissick.

One of Suttles' hallmarks was how he managed to create works that were highly personal messages to friends, whether it be a poem or a sketch.

"He never sold his pieces, he always gave them away. So, instead of going to galleries and museums, we had to track down the friends and people that Vincet knew. I think it's neat for the people who own his pieces have this final tribute," said Kerrigan.

Located on the Horseshoe McKissick Museum is open from 9 a.m. - 4 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 1-5 p.m. Saturday and Sundays. The exhibition is free to the public.

USC professor develops new battery

KENYA PATTERSON Staff Writer

USC professor Ralph White has developed a new "rocking chair battery" that could be a future choice for toys, phones or other items with oddly-shaped battery housings.

"Eventually, they will eliminate the need for buying batteries because manufacturers will sell more and more devices that have batteries already built in. The toys won't need batteries," White said. "It's easier to make that small battery into toy housing compartments and into different shapes and containers. Just like the hand-held phones, they will be combined and stacked up for more power than you would get from the decals."

The "rocking chair battery" gets its name from the shuttling action of the lithium ions between the positive and negative electrodes. When the appliance is running, the ions shuttle, or "rock," to one electrode. When it is being recharged, they rock back to the other.

"One single battery can't meet all of the needs in the future," White said. "Batteries will come already installed in the appliance. In order to recharge the battery, you would recharge the ap-

Public health school opens high-tech computer center

Staff Reports

A new computer center opened Thursday at the School of Public Health, linking students with health care professionals throughout the world.

"Part of the excitement for us is that we are able to offer our students the most advanced computer technology," Sam Baker, director of the center and a health administration professor, said. "Graduate students taking USC's health politics course, for example, will be able to tap into the Internet and get on-line information from Washington on the current status of health care legislation."

Students will also be able to use the Internet and communicate with health care leaders statewide. The center will provide access to CD-ROM databases at Thomas Cooper Library.

Winona Vernberg, dean of the School of Public Health, said the center will allow students to keep up with rapid changes in health care.

"This computer center is an outstanding example of business and industry and higher education working together to improve education and health care in South Carolina," she said.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield of South Carolina, Companion Technologies and IBM donated $77,000 in computer equipment to fund the center.

"[We] know how important it is that future managers of health care be fully prepared to use technology to help deliver high-quality, low-cost health care," said M. Edward Sellers, president and chief executive officer of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of South Carolina.

The center will primarily be used by graduate students and public health faculty.

Priest placed on leave after allegations

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Roman Catholic Bishop David Thompson said Thursday he placed a Taylors priest on administrative leave after allegations of sexual misconduct with a minor were made against him.

The person who made the allegations against the Rev. Paul Seitz requested confidentiality, said Mary Jeffcoat, a spokeswoman for the Diocese of Charleston.

Seitz, 67, has been pastor of the Prince of Peace parish since 1985. He was ordained in 1958 and has had assignments in Aiken, Anderson, Greenville, Hilton Head, Myrtle Beach and North Augusta, Jeffcoat said.

The alleged misconduct occurred in Aiken County about 30 years ago, Jeffcoat said. The diocese said it first found out about the possible problem last week.

"It is a credible accusation," Jeffcoat said. "We did notify the (Aiken) solicitor's office."

She would not discuss details of the allegation.

Calls to Solicitor Barbara Morgan's office were not immediately returned Thursday afternoon.

Patrol orders souped-up Z-28s for officers

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — The South Carolina Highway Patrol's latest wheels might be just enough to interest some teen-agers in a law enforcement career.

The patrol, which had been using souped-up Ford Mustangs, wants to test drive Chevrolet Z-28 Camaros as the latest tool in traffic enforcement.

The Z-28 already is a hot-rodder's dream, but the patrol has ordered its cars loaded, with a 5.7 liter V-8 engine that puts out 275 horsepower, a performance suspension and a speedometer that peaks at 150 mph.

Spokesman Lou Fontana said Thursday that the patrol has ordered 14 Camaros at $16,956 apiece. The state hopes to get them in April or May for a one-year test, but there is still some uncertainty, he said.

"We just don't know whether they will fill our order. They've been filling orders on a first-come, first-served basis," Fontana said.

The patrol has been looking at new cars since it decided last April to phase out the Mustangs, Fontana told The Greenville News.

The Mustangs were too crowded after they were loaded with police equipment and the standard Ford Crown Victoria police cruiser was performing almost as well, he said.

The patrol also has talked about testing some four-wheel-drive vehicles, he said.

Fontana said the 14 Camaros were ordered after they got good reviews from other police agencies across the country.

Along with the hefty engine, the two-door Camaros will have power door locks, power side mirrors, power windows and a four-speed automatic transmission, Fontana said. They will cost about $1,300 more than the Crown Victoria.
