broadcast from the Visitor's Center, USC's custodial staff has been working extra hard on the landscaping outside the center. This will be the first time that the Visitor's Center has been showcased on the inside.

"Anytime the media showcases something it is always a plus for the center and the university," said Twila Jones, assistant director at the Visitor's Center.

During the program Mercer will take viewers through various parts of the Visitor's Center. It's anticipated that the mural and the beauty of the center will be highlighted during the program. Showcasing the Visitor's Center will help to inform the public about the many services offered.

"The Visitor's Center has established a reputation as a referral system that likes to eliminate the runaround visitors face," Jones said.

The center is known for the front door policy it provides visitors with information about both USC and the community. Many people in the community presently consider the Visitor's Center a gateway to the university.

WIS's broadcast will conclude with the taping of the six and seven o'clock evening news reports from the Horseshoe. Susan Aude Fisher will anchor the two evening programs.

Sieger said the Horseshoe was chosen for the premier newscast because the Horseshoe says

USC. It is also considered to be the heart of USC.

During the 7 p.m. report, Aude Fisher will accompany USC professor Dave Rembert and his class on a field trip along the Broad River. Rembert is known on campus for his unique teaching style that involves frequently taking his classes on field trips.

"The Spirit of Carolina hopes to let people know that USC is here and to talk with students at USC and find out what makes it special," said Sieger.

Officials said they have no idea who is behind the prank.

"I attended the debate on higher education and the legislators weren't too favorable of college students," Brewer said. "They don't want to invest here, and this isn't a favorable thing for us."

from students and administrators of the time, will be shown as well. Students will have the opportunity to ask the panel members relevant questions.

"Everybody who was here at the time remembers exactly what they were doing," Wilson said. "I never knew anything about it. If people were in on campus or in Columbia at the time, they know exactly what happened. This is a big deal to them."

While the actual protest took place May 7, ODK designated this Monday as a commemorative date so as not to interfere with exams.

dropped from 90,000 to 55,000. To provide some planning stability we looked for a location in the United States."

South Carolina was attractive for many reasons beyond its fourteenth-place in national rankings of international development. Economic links between Germany and the Palmetto state have existed since 1965.

"More than 100 German manufacturers have developed operations in the state, and with our growing network of suppliers and the higher profile of this area as a good place to do business, this figure will only increase," Hitt said.

At home BMW must also contend with the highly organized labor unions. The average German worker clocks 1,600 hours annually compared with his American counterpart who works between 1,900-2,000. Combining this disparity with a state union labor rate that hovers around 3 percent, and many of the problems encountered with the very powerful German unions simply disappear.

As plans call for the export of 60 percent of the production overseas, the export infrastructure of the port of Charleston, the second largest on the Eastern Seaboard, was very important. The absence of any previous history of regional automobile manufacturing also played a part because of the company didn't want to have to retrain their employees in their distinct way of building a car.

The upstate area has a very developed manufacturing base around Greenville-Spartanburg. Many of these workers, experienced in factory line work, were among the 60,000 aspirants who applied for positions last year. They sought jobs whose salaries will reach approximately $50,000 per year by the end of the decade.

Construction of their new vocational home took 15 months with the first car rolling off of the line last September. Commercial shipments to dealers began in March, and production is slowly increasing from the present 35 cars. Hitt said the company's philosophy is "we will build quality first and quantity second."
